While there has been much controversy over concentration of ownership in the Quebec communications field, Mr. Beaubien asserted emphatically that Telemedia's interests now exercise no control over Telemedia.

The late Maurice Philippe de Gaspe Beaubien gives sole credit on Quebec publishing pioneer merchant named Pierre Peladeau, founder of Montreal Quebec-Printers of the Court Property—centres age of 10 million circulation.

Many French-Canadian names are beautiful because they come from nature," said Mr. Beaubien, whose kin are prominent in business, finance and politics. Philippe-Aubert de Gaspe, named for the location of his seigneury, became an early novelist of the French regime.

Mr. Beaubien spoke of a potential conflict in broadcasting through business and other aspects of traditional French-Canadian culture.

"Today we hear a lot about controlling our own destiny, having a hand in business and all that," he said. "Well, I think we had a lot and dealt it away for a good life. I made no judgment on that; except I feel badly that we are a people who have to start over again in every generation."

French-Canadians may not have controlled the great corporations in the past but they did control smaller enterprises producing the needs of abundant energy resources.

Then came the energy crisis, which made seven Medicine Hats slow-revealed natural gas a precious commodity. Suddenly the petrochemical industry suddenly decided that Medicine Hat was an ideal location.

The boom has reached the stage of putting the city in actually talking about controlling growth. Officials have decided not to sell any more city-owned gas as a petrochemical feedstock and are studying alternatives to gas-fired electricity generation.

An acute labor shortage has developed and Alderman Ted Grimm, chairman of city council's utilities committee, the community in such areas as construction, trucking, food, transportation and services.

"A lot of small businesses did not continue," said Mr. Beaubien. "To many French-Canadians, business was not what it means to an end, not an end in itself."

They took as much as possible out of business as a profession, a good life for themselves and "they were a lot." But they missed less preoccupation than the English-language milieu with spending money, management succession" independent of the oldest.

Mr. Beaubien took a degree at Master of Business Administration at Laval, where he met Nan-bowes O'Connell of Boston, whom he made his wife.

Though the oldest son, he left the electrical business founded by his father and entered as a management consultant throughout Canada. He founded a distribution company, operating 120 trucks in Quebec and Ontario, and sold it in 1965.

"I was in the midst of buying another company when the Expo offer came," said the man who was to supervise a part of it that was to be saved to the Order of Canada for his work on the world exposition.

"They told me they needed a crazy French-Canadian for the job," Mr. Beaubien recalled, moustache slanting in a mischievous grin.

The Expo adventure continued into that Canada's two cultural mainstreams can do great things if they manage to preserve the confidence to work together.

"I agree that sounds corny, but I really mean it," said Mr. Beaubien. Expo was a great success because it brought the best of the two traditions together.

"In fact, I think we have already done more in our country than Expo did in many areas where else, regardless of the problems that exist between the two groups. We are a heck of a lot closer than England is to France, if one can make that comparison."

Mr. Beaubien said he admires Mr. Desmarais and his partner Paul Desmarais, Jean Parisien, as French-Canadians practising an aggressive economic role.

He is also grateful to them for being "more open with me" during a period when his financial backing for the Trudeau purchase faded because of a published report said he was acting as a "front" for Desmarais interests. He left the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

"They personally have to lay the payments," said Mr. Beaubien. "They let me make a little bit." He admires what people say, they have nothing to do with my personal decisions. They have no directive to the board. There is no way they can get involved."

Mr. Beaubien said one branch of the partners' Rock Demers, an experienced businessman, is executive vice-president to help rebuild the company, which had been shaken by personality differences.

But two of the properties had been in the family.

"Today Telemedia has turned around every one of those properties and made them profitable," said Mr. Beaubien. "It has been a hard time, but we have become an international force in the broadcasting community. We've formed a network and we've established our own news service."

Besides CFAC, the properties are CKLT and CKDS and CKVL in Montreal, CJSS-TV, Rimouski, CJBR-TV, Rimouski, CJSN, Trois-Rivieres; and CKCH, Hull-Ottawa. Staff totals 825.

"I don't think one man can control information today," Mr. Beaubien said in reply to questions. "There is no way I could go into the news room of one of those stations and tell anybody what should be said or pushed."

Chinese Annoyed By French Movie

PARIS (Reuter) — Just 10 years after Charles de Gaulle created a diplomatic stir with links with Peking, Franco-Chinese relations appear ruffled by a film about Mao which the puritanical Chinese censors find the charms of the French capital.

The Chinese Embassy here has issued a strong statement warning that the film, Les Chinois (The Chinese Are in Paris), posed serious problems for relations between the two countries.

French Maoists handed out leaflets outside one of the cinemas in the Paris area where the film is showing, charging that it insulted both the French and Chinese people.

The film itself, though it does have some sharp digs in Western eyes—at the dedicated Peking revolutionaries, is a comedy based on the legend traditional flaws in the French character.

Based on a work of political fiction, the film imagines the Chinese Embassy being run by the Chinese army, though the embassy personnel are in slightly veiled account of what took place during the Japanese occupation of 1940-1944.

The Chinese were particularly galled at what they considered the unsympathetic and violence involved is that used by French police who with fists, boots and truncheons brutally serve the occupiers.

Another of the film's leading men, who also directed the movie-maker and was the main producer, has come under attack in the French film world.

The film critic of the respectable newspaper Le Figaro lambasted Yanne for having produced a film he said was devoid of any idealism and lamented that "unfortunately it is highly improbable that the public will respond with the indignation necessary to this moral degeneration costing millions."

Yanne is delighted with the publicity which follows his own gaudy poster campaign with posters written half in French and half in Chinese.

The film itself abounds with episodes and in-jokes directed at each section of society. Its zone is as outstanding as the sequence which is reported to have unleashed the ire of Peking.

It is a spoof on a modern Chinese revolutionary opera in which French collaborators create a modern version of Carmen—entitled Carmengirl—and fall in love with Marxist-Leninist ideology.

The sequence was filmed in the Paris Opera with Bizet's classic played in a version representing a guerrilla campaign by a Chinese people's army and a long-haired American GIs oppose the "Red Women's Detachment."

French authorities are also portrayed unflatteringly.

Actor Berard Blier, who looks strikingly like President Pompidou, is seen cadaverously dancing with a prostitute and heroism as the Chinese approach Paris, only to flee to a nearby cinema where the television camera swings away from the film.

French generals are seen squabbling among themselves and each assuming the other is about to assume the role of Napoleon, Pompidou

Families Pooled Their Resources

"We're Here to Stay," is the motto of seven farm families at Lestock, Sask., who have pooled resources so that rising costs would not drive them off their land. This delightfully warm and humorous half-hour visit with the families of Agri Pool will be presented in the NFB series West, on the CBC-TV network on Wednesday, March 27, at 10 p.m.

Three years ago, the farmers decided that the investment they had tied up in land and machinery wasn't giving them the way of life and standard of living they wanted. So they pooled their land and equipment to farm as a co-operative, with each member having special responsibilities according to his capabilities.

According to the president of Agri Pool, "the difference between a co-operative and a corporate farm is that you go into corporate farming only to make a buck. But we are primarily interested in maintaining our way of life, to be able to pass on to other people, and to enjoy the freedom to do other things in our spare time."

However, he said his wife Jackie had no objection.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Touch of Class and Save the Tiger were named Thursday by the Writers Guild of America as the best comedy and drama written directly for the motion picture screen.

Paddy Chayefsky received the Laurel Ward, presented to the "writer who has advanced the literature of motion pictures through the years and has made outstanding contributions to the profession of the screen writer."

Chayefsky wrote The Hospital, The Goddess, Marty and many other motion pictures.

The $4.5-million movie is based on William Bradford Huie's novel of bigotry in the southern parts of the United States.

There hasn't been so much excitement here since a dam was built. Citizens can visit the town square and find a race riot being staged. They can catch glimpses of Lee Marvin, Cameron Mitchell, Lola Falana, Luciana Paluzzi and football star O. J. Simpson, who has a dramatic role in the film.

U.S. Deserter's Widow Under Assumed Name

DETROIT (AP) — A Detroit newspaper says the widow of the only United States soldier shot for desertion since the Civil War is living here under an assumed name.

Antoinette Slovik, wife of Pte. Eddie Slovik, executed during the Second World War, had been presumed dead for nearly a decade by all who knew her, except a few close relatives. She and Slovik had no children.

But obscurity may become more difficult to Mrs. Slovik, now 50.

After Mrs. Slovik learned of her husband's execution, she married his older brother, Raymond. They now are separated.

"If I hadn't been for the incident (Slovik's execution), my life would have been different," Mrs. Slovik told the Detroit News in a copyright story. "But since then, it's been nothing but hell."

"They took a sick man," she said of Eddie, who had been granted a deferment because of a prison record but was then reclassified and drafted.

"He was big and really wasn't fit for combat," she said.

"He was asked to go deer hunting with some friends of his, but he told me he couldn't shoot anything, not even a rabbit."

An army buddy, John Tankey of Dearborn Heights, recalled that in the fall of 1944 he and Slovik were lost in France after a German machine-gun nest wiped out nine of 12 men in their squad.

Tankey recalled: "I reported to a captain first and was told there about 45 minutes. He told me, 'You're a rifleman now, but you're going to be a machine-gunner.'

Then Eddie went in. He was in there a long time and soon I could hear shouting coming through the door.

"Eddie came out real fast, brushing by me and he didn't have his rifle. The captain told me, 'You'd better stop your buddy. He's going to get into a lot of trouble.'

"I asked Eddie, what are you doing? But he kept on walking away from me and said, 'John, leave me alone. I know what I'm doing.' That was the last time I saw him, walking down a hill."

That was Oct. 8, 1944. The next day Slovik gave himself up and signed a paper saying he refused to carry a rifle.

Slovik was sentenced to death by an army court-martial, and two days before Christmas of that year, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower signed the execution order. The order was carried out on Jan. 31, 1945.

CBC Production Took Three Years

OTTAWA (CP) — Three years of preparations culminate this week in the CBC-TV network documentary drama Next Year in Jerusalem, written, directed and produced by Harry Rasky of Toronto.

It is another in the award-winning Rasky series of epic documentaries in the fashion of Hall of Kings, the story of Westminster Abbey which won an Emmy, and Upon this Rock, filmed in and around St. Peter's in Rome, awarded a Venice film festival prize.

Lorne Greene, looking older than Pa Cartwright in his Bonanza series, is the on-camera narrator who links together nearly 4,000 years of Jerusalem's history in a 90-minute show.

Something had to give in the condensation, and Rasky who have seen the film say it does not give enough weight to their Jerusalem corner of the Holy City.

Next Year in Jerusalem traces the Judeo-Christian history of the city, founded where the Bible says Abraham prepared to sacrifice his son, Isaac, and where Moslems believe Mohammed made his flight into heaven.

Centrepiece of the film is the Dome of the Rock, the Mosque of Omar, believed to be on the site of Solomon's Temple, and the show ends with shots of the Wailing Wall in the Old City.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Tuesday, Mar. 26

Aries (March 21-April 19) Materially, things look promising today, but there's another situation that will cause frustration due to a companion's opposition.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) You're likely to have to face some heavy obligations out of your making. Try to have others carry their share.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) Your interest is not focused where it should be at this time. This could cause future problems. Attend first to priority matters.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) Avoid the company of one of your peer group who is putting pressure on you. This person is much too distorted at present.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) Secrecy, today, could easily sidetrack you today. Concentrate on goals that contribute to your reputation or career.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) This is not the time to act on financial matters without expert outside advice. Don't rely only on your judgment.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) A situation where you share a joint interest requires equal adjustments. Bring things out in the open now.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) This could be a very trying day workwise. Make some "Plan" plans for this evening so you can unwind.

Sagittarius (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) It's going to take self-discipline to direct your efforts where they belong. Keep your mind on your tasks.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Tread lightly early in the day. Domestic pressures will still be heavy. Toward late afternoon they'll begin to lift.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Don't deal in the realm of ideas. They won't show a profit at this time. Something practical you're involved in will.

Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20) Your finances are still up in the air. Your outlay is likely to be greater than your intake. Be very conservative.

Trudeau Faces Vote Tuesday

OTTAWA (CP) — Two days of debate on Conservative motions will culminate Tuesday night in yet another vote test of confidence for the minority Liberal government.

However, indications are that the New Democrats, effective balance of power in the Commons, will wait at least until a new budget is presented before voting against the Trudeau administration.

The Conservatives have two motions scheduled for today and Tuesday. Today's, aimed at reviewing urban affairs policies, will not come to a vote.

The confidence vote, set for late Tuesday night, likely will be based on inflation or a related subject. It is only one of three votes possible Tuesday.

The government's 1973-74 supplementary spending estimates have to be approved and there could be more than one vote on these. The government tabled supplementary estimates of $1,119 billion March 7.

They may be broken into sections for interim votes as the House considers approval of an extra $425 million in old age security and family allowance payments, $50 million for petroleum product subsidies and other appropriations.

The supplementary estimates brought the 1973-74 total figure to $20.674 billion in budgetary expenditures and $838 million in loans, investments and advances.

They were tabled a week after the $22 billion main estimates for the 1974-75 fiscal year. The current year ends next Sunday, March 31.

A vote also is scheduled Tuesday night on $3.1 billion for interim supply.

This is necessary because the 1974-75 estimates, currently before the Commons miscellaneous estimates committee for detailed study, are not expected to be approved until June.

The interim funding will enable the government to continue its spending programs until the main estimates get Parliament's approval.

Wednesday, the House resumed second reading of a bill that amends the Combines Investigation Act and the Bank Act.

Commonly known as the competition bill, this is aimed at protecting consumers and small businesses against unfair pricing and advertising practices.

The bill would forbid misleading advertising and give consumers new protection on guarantees and warranties. A variety of pricing and selling techniques, including pyramid selling and referral selling, would be banned or restricted.

Wiretapping OK Could Be Routine

TORONTO (CP) — Samuel Dash, former chief counsel to the United States Senate Watergate committee, brought his advice Saturday to Ontario legislators discussing wiretap legislation.

Mr. Dash, who wrote a book on wiretapping some years ago, warned that requiring a court order for a legal wiretap might become a rubber stamp to give bugging unwarranted respectability.

Speaking to an Osgoode Hall seminar discussing Canada's new Protection of Privacy Act, he said "very few judges are going to be able to deny an application" for a wiretap order.

Based on his experience in the U.S., he said the judge had difficulty making an informed decision because he knows nothing of the men who will do the tapping.

Although a wiretap order has the appearance of a search and seizure warrant, you have in fact a general warrant and you're dragging in the judge to make it look good."

Under the new Canadian law which takes effect July 1, a wiretap order is good for 30 days, after which police may go to the judge for an extension of 30 days.

The person whose telephone is tapped must be notified within 90 days of the end of the 30-day period, but this provision also may be altered if a judge feels police need more time.

Mr. Dash said judges should be far tougher on police wiretap extensions than they are on initial orders.

The police wiretapper is looking for specific information, he said, and "if he can't get it in 30 days, obviously he's fishing."

To help keep the systems honest, there should be an agency to review wiretap orders, he added. Police who use illegal wiretaps should be prosecuted.

U.S experience shows that prosecution of police for illegal tapping "is dismal," he said.

Spicer Not Worried By Bill on Language

OTTAWA (CP) — Keith Spicer, the commissioner of official languages, says he is not worried about proposed legislation to make French the official language of Quebec.

Speaking on the CTV television network program Question Period, Mr. Spicer said he hasn't seen the legislation, proposed earlier this month by Premier Robert Bourassa at the opening of the national assembly, but he thinks the rights of English Canadians in Quebec will be preserved.

He said the legislation doesn't shock him.

He said the Official Languages Act designates eight provinces as officially English-speaking.

Quebec had always treated its English minority with generosity.

"When the English-speaking provinces have done for their French-speaking minorities what Quebec has done . . . then maybe we can have a serious discussion about the thing," he said.

"I'm confident that the rights of English speakers in Quebec are being preserved."

In another vein, Mr. Spicer discussed his recently-released third annual report.

He said he thinks that the general climate towards bilingualism has changed.

"I think people are now accepting the simple principle that the two official languages should have equal status."

Although his report dealt harshly with some aspects of government bilingual policies, he did congratulate the federal bureaucracy "for at least having the guts to try and increase bilingualism.

"We're the only country in the world that has taken this linguistic bull by the horns" and tried to make several thousand public servants bilingual.

He said there has been a bad drop-out rate, but at least there was courage enough to attempt to reach both official languages.

The only long-term solution, he said, is through immersion courses in the early years of elementary school.

"I think in 1983, 1984, we're going to have a new generation of kids who are going to take bilingualism . . . as a natural acquisition in their education."

Waiter's Tips $16,375

TORONTO (CP) — Walter Antonio Mendes, 28, has been fined $1,863.37 for not declaring tips totalling $16,375.88 on his 1970 and 1971 income tax returns.

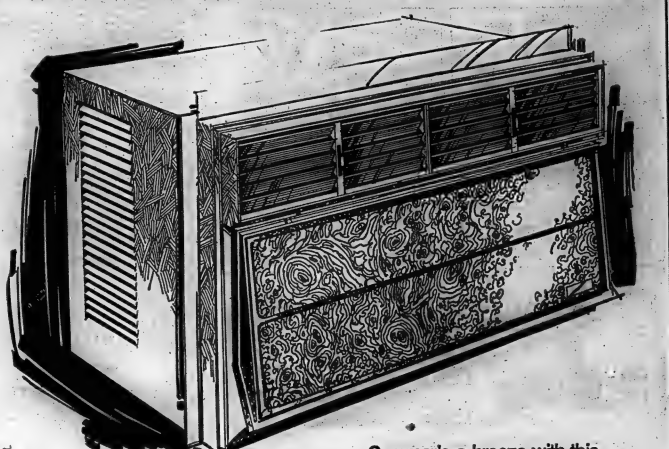
Mendes said in an interview Friday that government tax investigators probably looked at restaurant files and estimated his tips from amounts on credit card receipts.

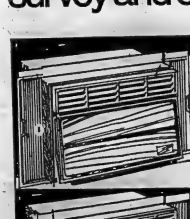
The $16,375.65 was a "reasonable amount" reflecting his income in tips during the two-year period, said the waiter who earns $90 a week without tips.

Immigration Probe



TORONTO (CP) — RCMP have charged a federal immigration officer with criminal offences involving immigrants after separate investigations within Toronto's Greek community.

Frank Hertfield, 37, a manpower employee for six years, was scheduled to appear in provincial court today on a charge of forgery. He was remanded Friday on $1,000 bail.



Hertfield and 10 other persons were charged after eight employment visas were recovered after several weeks of investigation, an RCMP spokesman said.

Tradeau Sees Lougheed

Deadlock Forecast Over Price of Oil

But there are no indications that the talks with the western premiers will provide any final answers to the problem of how much to charge for oil.

Mr. Trudeau and the Alberta premier talked for 1½ hours Monday in preparation for a meeting Wednesday of the prime minister and all 10 provincial premiers. But neither gave any indication afterward that a breakthrough is imminent on the oil-price question.

"I honestly don't know," Mr. Trudeau said in reference to Wednesday's meeting, the second national energy conference since late January.

"If it (the conference) doesn't reach an agreement, that means legislation. But I shouldn't even be saying that. You'll say, 'aha, you're threatening the provinces'."

Premier Lougheed was equally noncommittal with reporters, but indicated that a temporary solution is the best that can be hoped for Wednesday.

Major energy-related questions such as western economic development and freight rates still require detailed negotiation, he said.

"That sounds like anything we do Wednesday is still going to be a temporary answer; I've never felt there would be a long-term agreement reached this quickly."

The freeze has kept oil produced and used in Canada at about $4 a barrel since September while international prices have climbed to more than $10.50 a barrel.

Both Saskatchewan and Alberta, which together produce about 96 per cent of all domestic oil, have called for major increases when the freeze ends. Ottawa has agreed that some increase is necessary but wants it held to a minimum.

Prime Minister Trudeau, except for his reference to legislation, did not elaborate on what Ottawa plans if the conference ends in a deadlock.

Premier Lougheed refused to comment Monday, saying Alberta will keep a "closed door."

A $2-a-barrel increase in the wellhead price of western crude would boost the cost of fuel oil to six cents a gallon in retail gasoline prices.

Britain Borrows To Cover Deficit

LONDON (CP) — Britain's major banks have arranged to borrow $2.5 billion in foreign currency for a 10-year period to help cover the balance-of-payments crisis, Denis Healey, chancellor of the exchequer, announced today.

As he began his two-hour budget speech, Healey painted a sombre picture of the country's economy which was badly hit by heavy foreign trade deficits, a coal strike and energy shortages as well as rapidly-spreading inflation.

As Healey spoke, the government announced that Britain's foreign trade deficit in February increased to a record £439 million (one billion), surpassing the previous record deficit equivalent to $900 million in January.

The heavier cost of vital imports contributed to the huge January-February deficits. For example, Britain imports about 90 per cent of its oil and oil prices trebled in February compared with prices a year ago.

Referring to the $2.5-billion, 10-year loan, Healey said he believes it is the largest of its kind raised in the international market. He said the loan should make clear to the world "that we can finance the deficit which lies ahead."

"Borrowing is more sensible in economic and human terms than trying to cut imports by massive deflation," he told the House of Commons, indicating there would be no huge attempts to slash the British consumer market immediately.

He hinted early in the budget speech that radical Labor promises, such as a "soak-the-rich" wealth tax would be deferred. He said he would introduce a second budget later in the year.

However, he warned that the economic outlook is "the gravest situation Britain has faced since the war." Inflation was running at an annual rate of 13.2 per cent and rising.

Soviet Spokesman Hints Arms Accord Is Unlikely

MOSCOW (CP) — United States State Secretary Henry Kissinger and Communist party chief Leonid Brezhnev met for 2½ hours in the Kremlin today and opened discussions on the Middle East.

They scheduled a further meeting for late afternoon.

During eight hours together Monday, Brezhnev and Kissinger focused on strategic arms limitations and the European security conference in Geneva.

It was presumed that those subjects were again taken up today, but United States officials said they moved onto the Middle East situation before the end of the morning session.

Sitting in on the talks was Alfred Atherton, assistant state secretary for Near Eastern affairs. Also present were Kissinger's advisers on strategic weapons and European problems.

Observers said the talks appeared to be moving slowly.

Meanwhile, a Soviet spokesman voiced the possibility that Kissinger, during his current visit, might be unable to lay the groundwork for another arms-limitation agreement for President Nixon to sign when he visits Moscow next summer.

Kissinger, before his arrival Sunday, made clear that his chief goal in his talks this week with Communist party chief Leonid Brezhnev was to break the deadlock in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks in Geneva. A similar Soviet goal was indicated by Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, who said at a luncheon he gave for the U.S. visitor Monday.

"We would wish the forthcoming summit meeting to be marked by new important steps on the path of development of Soviet-American relations between our states and improvement of the international atmosphere."

But later Monday, the Kremlin's leading authority on Soviet-American relations, Georgy Arbatov, told reporters travelling with Kissinger that it is not necessary always to expect "big results" from summit meetings.

Replying to Gromyko's luncheon toast, Kissinger said President Nixon is determined to make his policy of Soviet-American detente "irreversible." But he warned:

"If our two nations attempt to take advantage of each other, if we attempt to blackmail each other, or deal with each other from a strong position, then there can be no peace among ourselves or in the world."

Tel Aviv Reports Plot Against Marine Targets

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Reliable sources in Tel Aviv said today European security agencies have been warned that an international group of terrorists may be mounting attacks on naval installations or ships in their countries.

The sources said 14 Palestinian guerrillas and other extremists have received training in marine sabotage in Australia, and had intended to leave for Europe early this week. The sources said Australian authorities are trying to prevent their departure.

Meanwhile, Syrian Defence Minister Mustafa Tlas says Syria "has no choice but to inflict as many losses as it can" on Israel.

Border fighting between Syria and Israel continued for the 15th day today and a Syrian communique said: "Our positions are dealing fierce blows to the enemy."

There were no casualty reports and Israel Monday said their forces did not return Syrian shots.

Minister Tlas said Monday night that "Syria will not let the enemy rest on any part of occupied territory."

Although Syria accepted the initial appeal by the United Nations last October to stop fighting, there has been no formal disengagement of Israeli and Syrian troops similar to the accord reached on the Israeli-Egyptian front.

Miller Considers Letting Denturists Deal with Public

TORONTO (CP) — Health Minister Frank Miller says he is considering the possibility of permitting licensed denturists to work directly with the public.

"That is one of the alternatives," Mr. Miller said in an interview Monday after the question was raised in the legislature.

"But one should not assume that the decision to change the bill has been made."

The Denture Therapists Act passed last year requires denturists to take a government test to obtain a licence and then work only under the supervision of dentists.

"As a new minister I have the right to look at any controversial legislation," said Mr. Miller, recently appointed health minister in a cabinet shuffle, "and this is a controversial one."

In the legislature Monday, Attorney-General Robert Welch refused a request by New Democratic Party leader Stephen Lewis for an end to prosecution of denturists, pending possible revisions in the act.

It would be "quite improper and irresponsible" to follow such a request, said the attorney-general.

Mr. Miller also told the legislature his ministry is not responsible for prosecuting a Toronto dental laboratory that denturists say has been bootlegging false teeth.

Quebec to State James Bay Plans

MONTREAL (CP)—Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer will announce in the national assembly today the Quebec government's construction site policy is the wake of destruction last week at a James Bay hydro development camp.

The labor minister and Premier Robert Bourassa met Monday with officials of the James Bay Energy Corp. and provincial police. All declined comment after the talks.

Mr. Cournoyer said, however, he would propose administrative measures to improve conditions surrounding the recruiting of workers at construction sites throughout the province.

LG-1, largest camp in the $6-billion James Bay project, and two others on La Grande River were evacuated last Thursday and Friday after some of 900 men knocked out generators, destroyed firefighting and set fires that destroyed bunkhouses at LG-2.

Yvon Dubamel, business agent for Local 791, International Union of Operating Engineers (IUOE), was sentenced to eight days in jail for contempt when he refused to testify at a fire commission inquiry into the incident. The inquiry opened Monday and continues today.

Commission chairman Cyrille Delage imposed the sentence after Dubamel twice refused to say if he knew the locations of the incendiarized generators.

Some reports indicate the rampage erupted when two members of the Confederation of National Trade Unions (CNTU), the other union representing workers on the project, were hired by a contracting company that employed QFL men. They allegedly refused to work alongside the newcomers.

New Trenton Management System

Plan More Work Efficiency

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Months of preparation culminated last night in a town council bid to make better performance use of the town's department of public works.

The department, one of the largest spenders of town finances, has been under review since last fall.

Consultants came back to town council and for $25,000 have given Trenton a plan to get greater efficiency out of the tax dollars making up the department budget.

The system of management passed council last night, with virtually no discussion apart from reading of a company news release.

The system, designed by Toronto consultants Stevenson and Kellogg, will manage all roads, sidewalk and gutter maintenance work in Trenton.

"The objective of the system is to allow the town to provide substantially higher levels of maintenance service at the present cost," the release reads.

For $25,000 the system, claim its designers, will make "major improvements in the town's operations."

There was no specific mention during the council session what the system actually entailed.

Mayor Robert Patrick said the $25,000 "would cost increase the public works staff but would pay a concept, a new design for more effective spending.

"We're just trying to get the most for our money," he said.

"We hope to upgrade the performance of the department of public works," said the mayor. He declined comment on the department's past performance.

The system should take approximately six months to install and will be administered by acting commissioner of public works Arie Hoorweg, says the mayor.

"It's hard to judge how much of my job it will take this way," Mr. Hoorweg said. "It will be helpful."

A council resolution last night stated the way to softening the financial blow of the program.

The town is applying to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for a 50 per cent subsidy, leaving about $13,500 to be picked up by taxpayers. This application will be made immediately.

Mayor Patrick said this money should be recouped in a more efficient department with project costs reduced through more "efficient use of men and equipment."

Several municipalities in Ontario have already contracted the system. There was no mention in last night's meeting if these other municipalities, including one as close as Oshawa, had been contacted for their opinions of the service.

The mayor said while the system will be managed locally, it will be monitored by the consulting firm.

The release states the system will be installed in time for the town to benefit from it in the planning for next fall and the winter of 1975."

There was no mention of how long the system will run or what contractual arrangements had been made with the system planners.

Checkups Aid Cancer Fight

MARMORA — Importance of a thorough physical examination every year was stressed by Dr. R. K. Singal at the opening of information meeting held at St. Andrew's Christian Church Hall.

Dr. Singal answered questions from an audience of 40 people at the meeting arranged by Belleville Cancer Society Chairman Gordon Bennett. Dr. Singal was a last-minute replacement for Dr. R. C. Burr of Kingston who had expected to be present and was unable to do so. Dr. Singal worked on the staff of Belleville General Hospital before he was also an adviser to the Belleville Cancer Society.

Mrs. Shirley Woodcox, president of the Belleville Cancer Society and Mrs. Ruth Follwell, a board member, were also invited to the meeting.

Mrs. Woodcox reminded that the Cancer Society Campaign effort is in the Quinte Mall, Belleville, April 2.

Mother Hurt, Youngsters Escape Crash

Mrs. Gloria Gray, 27, was unharmed in the accident in which, police said, her car went out of control, bounced over a curb and into a culvert causing $500 front-end damage to the late-model car.

The young woman was taken to hospital by a relative and was treated for facial cuts and abrasions. Mrs. Gray's two young children escaped with little more than a shaking up.

Pay System Changed

TRENTON —Town councillors will get their pay cheques on a quarterly basis following Monday night's council meeting.

The resolution caught most members of council and the town's treasurer but it was explained by Councillor Robert Wannamaker as a handy way to get paid.

The councillor pointed out there were two pay days a quarterly basis and that it would be "handy to get paid the same way to help pay the bills."

The resolution met with council's approval.

Grants: Requests, but No Action As Trenton Reviews Donations

TRENTON — A number of organizations came to town council last night soliciting grants, a touchy area at this time as council prepares to re-evaluate grants and cut away frills from town spending.

Gerald Boyce, Hastings County Historical Society, personally asked council for $200 for the society.

Mr. Boyce pointed to numerous benefits Trenton derives from the historical society. He reminded council to look part in future discussions in setting up the organization.

Council heard Mr. Boyce's report and moved on to other matters without comment.

The Quinte District Labor Council, spokesman for Trenton's Citizen Bureau, also approached council looking for subsidies once federal Local Initiatives Program funds run out in early July.

Gord Young, representing QDLC, said the program fulfills a "desperate need" in the community, having served some 850 individuals since it began in January.

Mr. Young said Trenton and the neighboring municipalities of Sidney and Thurlow township all benefit from each benefit from the bureau and that a salaried arrangement might be sorted out among the municipal group.

Mr. Young asked council for "not more than $8,000."

Mayor Patrick said only that the request would receive council's consideration.

The club will hold a skating show within the next several weeks and council made the payment for an advertisement in the show program.

Council moved over the amount of money going to wards grants, is taking a long look at the system. A clipping session was expected at the last committee-of-the-whole session a week ago but was deferred until next Monday when more information could be made available.

A list of all agencies receiving grants from the town is being compiled. Letters already have discussed cutting back the grants list.

Subdivision Stymied Says Town Developer

TRENTON — A developer claims a major subdivision has been stymied through the town's reluctance to take over roads, lighting and so on in Trenton's western limits.

A letter to council Monday night from Gerald Weaver, principal of Quinte Realty, explained that while the roadway is maintained by the province, extra wide road allowance is required, slimming the potential size of the property.

Mr. Weaver contends that through negotiations with the town over the road, his 100-

$4,300 For Recreation

MARMORA — A 1974 budget of $4300 has been approved by Marmora Recreation Committee.

Treasurer Gary Nobes prepared the estimates which will now be forwarded to the village council for approval.

Mr. Nobes also reported that the Marmora Senior Citizens' association continues to expand and has recently renovated and refurnished their clubroom.

The committee felt all hockey players had displayed good competition this year and were deserving of merit. The interest of many citizens had demanded their time and money to Minor Hockey activities was also appreciated.

Secretary Audrey Wentworth reported some applications had been received for summer program staff and these will be considered after the March 27 deadline.

George Wendt, chairman of the summer program, recommended that the Village Council be asked to assist with certain work at Legion Park.

lot development will be unable to get off the drawing board.

He pointed out the town has already built a water main on the road allowance. "Road good is that No one is going to build a road to a road allowance," says Mr. Weaver.

Question of who should take ownership of the road was simplified by the acting commissioner of works Arie Hoorweg.

"They" (the provinces) are paying for the maintenance while they own it," he said.

Deputy Clerk Arden Royce admitted Mr. Weaver had not been invited to Sing to assist in the matter by Trenton's subdivision development.

Mr. Weaver's property is contained in an area on which council two weeks ago put the developmental brakes.

Council decreed that building permits would not be issued in the affected area until a complete study was undertaken to determine cause and solutions to the land's drainage problems.

Council instructed town office staff to contact Mr. Weaver and the discussion would be held on the question of road ownership.

Told of Programs

MARMORA — Glen Sutton provincial government consultant attended the last meeting of Marmora Senior Citizens' Association to suggest some programs that might interest members and outlined briefly the aims of pertinent projects.

A two - minute silence in memory of Mrs. Mary Ann Jones, one of the Association's charter members, was observed.

Not Defined in Tender, Work to Cost $1,500

TRENTON — Renovation of Trenton's old municipal offices will cost the taxpayer at least another $1,500 before the new Quinte Planning Board tenants can move in.

Acting commissioner of public works Arie Hoorweg told council Monday there are several incomplete items because they were not spelled out in the tender."

The items, termed minor by Mr. Hoorweg, can be dealt with in two days. They range from the painting of baseboards in offices to replacing broken window panes and patching a carpet.

Councillor Greer was referring to last night's awarding of the arena roof renovation project to the firm of Miron - Wiggers Construction.

Other councillors came to the defence of Miron-Wiggers Construction, pointing out it was their job to comply to the tender and it is the consultant's job to make sure all necessary work is included in tender specifications.

These specifications were completed jointly by the staffs of Trenton's municipal office and the Quinte Planning Board, the office's new tenants.

OK Funds For Signals

TRENTON — Council last night approved partial financial responsibility for crossing signals proposed for Crestwell Drive.

Marchand's Pitch

We don't know whether Transport Minister Marchand was merely grandstanding, which is his forte, or whether he was trying to keep the Prime Minister on the side of the Government), but his talk of nationalizing CP Rail should be taken with a grain of salt.

That Canada's railroad system needs rejuvenating, that it requires the kind of fresh thinking and visionary action that now are so lacking, that it needs to do a far better job by the country than it is doing now, are all too evident. But nationalization, we submit, is not the answer for CP. Mississauga MP Donald Blenkarn describes it correctly as an impractical solution; he points to the example of Canadian National and calls it a prime case of "poor inept socialist management."

One branch of the country's railroad system under government control is enough. At the same time the Government does have a responsibility to the country, in this case ensuring that the railways which bear the brunt of freight movement coast-to-coast do an adequate job at the very least.

Both CN and CP have been criticized in the Commons for lagging grain shipments from Western Canada, with estimates of contracts lost because of slow shipments running as high as $600 million.

Nationalization is the socialist answer and this says something about Jean Marchand. As Charles Lynch points out in The Montreal Gazette, Lester Pearson used to say there were only two MPs strong with having the Quebecer in his cabinet. "One was that he was too pinko . . . The other was that he was always threatening to quit if he couldn't get things done his way."

The minister's performance in recent days is in kind, a re-run of some other characteristic performances, and as Lynch further suggests, it contains no hint of what he really wants done. Significantly, Mr. Marchand said no takeover plans had been discussed by cabinet, which means he may be putting not only himself but the Government out on a limb.

Another Hike

Inflation has been moving so relentlessly and playing such havoc with the value of the dollar that we wonder what is next in the for to jump in price.

And without wanting to give the Government any wrong ideas — in fact, let Queen's Park deny any such thing — we have a good idea what could be next in line.

Yes the season ticket that may still be gracing many a windshield, expires at the end of this month, and what better time to announce that next time around it will cost . . . well, let's not put it right into the bureaucratic lap. But X number of dollars at any rate, and we have our own idea of what it may be.

It has been $15 for the season of late. Before that it was $10 — and once upon a time it did cost a lidug.

The reason of course that will be advanced for any increase is: increased wages and cost of equipment. That sort of thing. It is so familiar now.

Anyone for the beach this year?

Sharing Blame

When we see evidence of arson in an apartment fire in Belleville and a similar, if less menacing case in Napanee, involving the scrapping of young trees planted by the city last summer, our reaction is one of anger and disbelief.

At the same time, we have to realize that in such actions, regrettable though they may be, we must look to ourselves for part of the answer at least. Society at large must share some of the blame.

There are other factors of course: home atmosphere and upbringing arising them, and it some find perverse release for their frustrations in vandalism this is only part of the story.

We must be on the alert, in the home and at school, for signs of maladjustment that might result in this kind of behavior. Apprehending blame is a fruitless enough exercise, but in trying to prevent a recurrence we can only look to ourselves and to the way society is functioning.

James Bond Concept Unrealistic
BBC Says

Firm Control Is Vital in Secret Service Operations

BBC London Letter

How can a modern State control the operations of a secret service? BBC World Service recently covered a lecture which tried to answer the question.

The speaker, John Bruce Lockhart, has had wide experience of intelligence work of different kinds and in many countries and was in charge of intelligence services during and after World War II.

His uncle, Sir Robert Bruce Lockhart, was an agent in Petrograd and Moscow at the time of the Bolshevik Revolution and wrote the book, Memoirs of a British Secret Agent.

If that sounds like a setting for a James Bond novel, said the BBC reporter, we are going to disappoint you; for one of the basic principles which we replace what he called the false glitz and glamour image of the James Bond picture with something more realistic.

And he was concerned, not with the work of the secret agent himself, but rather with the task of those who control him.

Control, in his view, was the weak point in intelligence operations. It was from incompetent control that the greatest dangers came - the danger of false information leading to distorted foreign policy, the danger of the secret service becoming a focus of conspiracy.

If intelligence operations must remain secret, the principles governing them must be known and discussed by the politicians, the military, and the public at large. He proceeded to suggest what these principles of control should be. Here are some of them:

One cardinal principle: one secret service should be responsible for external intelligence, another for internal intelligence. So each answers to a different Minister.

Democratic states, he thought, had accepted this principle. It is alleged that the former British Prime Minister Lloyd George said in 1934 that otherwise the head of the Secret Service might have more power than the Prime Minister.

Then, the first on which the Service operates should be kept as narrow as possible. The work of a secret agent is difficult, and it often embarrass the government he works for, so the Secret Service should be called in only where all else has failed.

And it is important not to have more than one of them in an area.

Another important principle of control: that direction of the Secret Service should be located at national level, not department level. That also applies to the collation of the intelligence once it had been collected.

Another principle: those in control of the Secret Service must have a realistic understanding of what intelligence is, concentrate only on real national secrets, which outside the Soviet Union do not change from year to year.

Only a few people should be called in only where all else has failed.

The speaker ended with a provoking question. All his principles of control applied to Secret Services anywhere, he felt. But when it came to defining the objectives of a Secret Service today, a democracy had a problem which totalitarian states did not have.

In the democracies voters can support a radical opposition quite legally. How then is the Secret Service of a democracy to know who "The enemies of the state are" in a world as dangerous as ours, the answer seemed to him vital, yet he confessed to us that he had no idea what it was.

Bar Facility Gives Scribes a Break

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — Yes, the press at this seat of government has its own bar—known, at this point, pub, saloon or whatever you want to call it.

News of this, to at least some people surprising development seemingly widely public when a debate on the status of the press gallery was reported in the media, with one of the facts emerging being that one of the costs of the gallery to the government was the salary of an attendant who was a bartender.

There may have been a few gasps throughout the province at the thought that the Queen's Park press had its own swilling facility.

But the strongest criticism to be made of the news reports was that they didn't do well by their subject.

For the press gallery bar is one of our most notable institutions with an illustrious and rather lengthy history.

Among points of fame, including naturally some worthy fisticuffs, was that for years it was one of the most exclusive blind pigs in the country and also that it got a Speaker fired.

The bar was started in the thirties at the instigation of Mitch Hepburn, a man with an eye for a glass who felt that a newspaperman should never suffer even slightly from thirst.

So his prompting a refrigerator was installed in the press gallery lounge and the steward was given carte blanche to buy liquor and beer; setting the own prices and pocketing the profits.

As the one oasis available to members as well as press it became the most popular social spot in the buildings. And successive stewards prospered.

It was all illegal, of course, until a few years ago when John Roberts finally decided that the public would stand for drinking in the Parliament buildings, and had licences issued not only for the press gallery lounge but also for a beer lounge for the members.

The incident that got the Speaker was when W. J. Stewart held that office in the forties.

Mr. Stewart, a dry man, gave orders that the bar be closed.

Premier George Drew who had strong respect for the social qualities of drink was incensed.

And not too long after Ontario had a new Mr. Speaker.

Economic Council's Studies

Cornwall Standard—Freeholder

Some time ago the Ontario Economic Council released five booklets covering various aspects of life in this province. The reports are the result of studies by five different researchers to the end of 1971; and the point is made that the findings expressed are those of the authors.

In a report termed The Economic Transformation of Ontario, D. R. Richmond gives figures showing that net Ontario government expenditures rose from $132,300,000 during the Second World War to $4,582,500,000 in 1971. This report states that the period in question has been one of affluence and rising expectations; that it has also been marked by a steady expansion in government spending. It states that the dollar has deteriorated in value but there has been a growth in employment opportunities and a rise in the material standard of living.

In the booklet on natural resources, W. E. Stevenson states that heavy expenditures for the protection of the environment are a recent development in the province. But he states that the best of environmental control costs on economic growth will be less severe in Ontario than Canada than in other industrialized countries." However, some provinces might be more inclined to accept the hazards of growth than Ontario.

The Service State Emerges is the third topic. Vernon Lang says that provincial and federal expenditures for health, education and welfare in 1971 represented 13.1 cents of every dollar of the gross provincial product. The three services absorbed 72 per cent of the provincial budget of $5.2 million in 1971. He states that the services now cost the province more than education.

Ontario's role in Confederation is dealt with by Joe Martin. He says that the concept of federalism appears to be on the way out and confrontation on the way in.

Speculating on the future he suggests that revenue sharing will be a key consideration in federal-provincial relations. Ottawa could assume the cost of one or more of the shared-cost programs now in effect, the provinces could be given more elastic revenue sources, Ontario could be forced to levy higher taxes or alternately it could be forced to cut expenditures.

The final booklet is titled the Municipal Dynamic and ties municipal government into the overall picture. Lionel D. Feldman writes that urban growth has been steady in Ontario, a total of 73.9 per cent of Ontario's 7.7 million people now live in 83 municipalities of 10,000 or more people. Although big service has been given to decentralization in favor of government, he was unable to find many examples of power having handed back to local units.

In other words there has been a trend to centralize at the local level. An encouraging sign, however, was in the increasing degree of consultation between the two levels of government.

We suppose the over-all picture is one of change through progress; but of no one really knowing the best way of coping with the conditions which are emerging as the result of rapid change.

Canadians and Bilingualism Issue

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

May I take issue to the letter written by a Mr. Patterson, who is challenging a letter by Mr. Patterson.

Perhaps noted different English speaking person's calling other English speaking persons bigots for wanting English mainly in Canada or provincially.

I've just read a letter by a French person calling another French person a bigot for wanting French only in Quebec, so I say let us English speaking people wake up before we find legislation for French mainly in Canada and Quebec only.

We cannot do anything to save the English language in Quebec now as anyone can see, but we can still save it in the rest of Canada if we want the west and show we have some guts.

I don't know how old Mr. McLean is, but I can remember when there were many English only, well that changed and now there are very few, and the pile up plastered with French, English taking the secondary place

Bible Digest
by E. S. BRAN

"And I will visit upon the Lord, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him. Isaiah 8:17

If we fail to wait on the Lord, we are likely to find ourselves in a wilderness that we have prepared for ourselves, wondering what went wrong. They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint." Now does that compare to the old "do it yourself plan"of trying to push everything through?

Conflict of Interest' Puzzle

The Trend

From time to time somebody is accused of it, or it is suggested that he "may be guilty" of it.

There does not seem to be a clear definition in municipal law. In some cases, it appears obvious. If an elected official votes on matters in which he would personally profit from the decision, he may be guilty of conflict of interest.

Some noise has been made about a Belleville councillor who voted on Chamber of Commerce matters while a member of the Chamber. Is that conflict of interest? Did he benefit personally? One doubts it.

Besides, if a man is elected to office, must he cease doing all business with the community, withdraw from everything to which he belongs, in order to avoid conflict of interest? That would make serving the public in office a penalty, rather than a privilege. After all, municipal politicians do not draw a living wage. From being council members. Their remuneration is a mere token.

So what really is conflict of interest? Perhaps we need another term for it. Perhaps all we really should ask is that a man put use his office to steer personal profit his way. That seems like an offence worth talking about. That a man votes on a body to which he belongs, expands his standing to make no personal profit, hardly seems like a crime of office. If it is conflict of interest, so be it. If having no interest in personal gain is the price of municipal politics, who would want to bother with politics at all? It is an impossible set of conditions.

Distaff Side of Law Enforcement

Dan Swain in
The Napanee Beaver

"Napanee Police Department, Sharon Adams speaking." The girl behind the voice is an attractive 18-year-old Grade 13 student who for the past two years has been working Saturdays and holidays at the Napanee Police Station.

She also worked for two weeks while the regular police stenographer was having her children's tonsils removed. "I'd like to go into the field of police or correctional work," she told The Beaver, "and it's good experience."

Police work has a fascination for Sharon Adams and she would like to make a career of some aspect of this kind of work. If she is not successful in finding a suitable job after graduation in the spring, she plans to continue her education at Queen's University, in the social sciences.

It's definitely not routine," she says of the work. "Something different is happening all the time. That is why it's so interesting."

She is using the investigation and trial of a murder case in Napanee back in 1949 as the basis of her history thesis and has been spending time at The Beaver doing research on the trial of James Fosbrery, who was convicted of murdering his wife on Nov. 28, 1949.

She is also conducting an opinion survey among police committee chairmen Cecil Baker circulated for her at the March council meeting includes such subjects as the way police and Napanee councillors have noted in cruise in Napanee which they have observed and how the present leadership plays in running an efficient police department.

"Anyone who comes into the police station, generally needs help," Sharon explains. "Sometimes it's a matter of giving directions but it may be something more serious. This is why it's interesting. You meet 12 and 14 years of age winding their bodies around a while brick

Of all the incidents and things that have happened when Sharon has been on duty, the one she particularly recalls is the distraught father who brought in the lawnmower he had been continually wandering away from the basement door by showing them the police station. Since the first visit, the father has been able to discuss and assures the small boys were similarly impressed.

Her duties at the police station include looking after the general duties of the office, doing some stenographic work, filing, handling the two way radio with the police cruiser and keeping an eye on prisoners. Among the interests that connects with the ground floor cell block.

During the school break, Sharon is going on a trip with a number of her fellow students from Napanee District Secondary School to Italy. There, they will visit several Italian cities including Rome and one of the points of interest for Sharon Adams will be getting to see the inside of an Italian police station.

Letters
The Law and Issue of Obscenity

Editor,
The Intelligencer

It is said that 'fools rush in where angels fear to tread' and in this regard, I cannot help but still regarding the report headed "Language Ruled Not Obscene".

The police were doing their duty when they removed a Belleville youth for kicking over a garbage can on the street, and the police had every right to word at them that you were not able to print, except the first letter.

And yet our Judge ruled that the word was obscene and let him off without a sentence or fine. This is unbelievable. I'm not 12 and 14 years of age winding their bodies around a while brick tree that was doing well after being planted only last year and I told them I would call the police if they didn't put down, and I stayed right there on the street until they put them down.

I told them they should be whipped for trying to be destructive. What kind of a book do they come from?

A "SQUARE"

City Council and UCS Spending

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

In reply to recent letters concerning United Community Services and certain knandom suggestions of cutbacks, changes and kickbacks to UCS via Council's grant system, I must add that we are a ray of hope for political and social justice.

Our Council members have taken a 'strong stand against reckless spending by United Community Services' and even more hopeful is the questioning attitude of other members of Council. Council must not peek their UCS budget and grant. Unknown to Council or much of the community, is the fact that UCS, in a sense, wears two hats. The hat of a collection agency in its United Way appeal and the hat of a social service agency in the social planning that it does. The United Way aspect of UCS funds its own administrator and secretarial help UCS claimed $20,000 in 1973. Its community Fund raised by the last appeal to pay these expenses. United Way funds often engage an administrator for only a quarter of a year during campaign time. The money left is directed into the donator, the taxpayer, and the social service agencies which do provide a real community service.

Ontario's Farm Leaders Prove Happy but Wary

TORONTO (CP) — Provincial agriculture, economy and farming leaders have reacted favorably to predictions that Ontario's farm cash receipts will increase by 25 per cent, and farm cash income will rise 29 per cent this year.

Recent forecasts by Statistics Canada said the province will have farm cash receipts of $3.3 billion in 1974, up from $2.55 billion in 1973. Farm cash income is expected to reach $810 million, compared with 1973 million last year.

A provincial economist said in a recent interview the strongest side of the farm income picture is crops, which usually account for about 30 per cent of farm cash receipts.

Byron Beeler, general manager of a seed grain company, estimates that the major shift in crop patterns this year will be an expansion of corn acreage.

Corn acreage might grow by 25 to 30 per cent to about 2.5 million acres, he said. But he said the expansion might come at the cost of soybean and cereal grain acreage.

Walker Maine, vice-president of the National Farmers Union, said that the potential increases may be ruined by accelerated inflation.

"If corn prices turn around, it will be a crisis situation for young farmers with heavy debt loads," he said.

Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said tight supplies and rising costs of everything from fertilizer to farm labor remain unresolved.

"My big concern this year is

Responsibility Denied For Denturists' Case

TORONTO (CP) — Health Minister Frank Miller said Monday his ministry is not responsible for prosecuting a Toronto dental laboratory that denturists say has been bootlegging false teeth.

Mr. Miller said denturists, "in an unofficial way", have shown him evidence the laboratory has been selling dentures directly to the public, contrary to the Denture Therapist Act.

"The person with that information, if true, have a perfect legal right to lay a charge if they wish," he said.

The health ministry has not involved itself in charges laid against denturists selling dentures directly without supervision by a dentist, and does not intend to initiate action against technicians who make denture therapists, he added.

Prosecution is the responsibility for denturists, said there are opportunities among dental technicians.

"They're taking shots at the dentists. I don't think that's fair," he said. "I'm getting to the case of three Guyanese men who were deported last week after obtaining work using fictitious names.

Two of the Guyanese were hired by National Sea Products Corp. Ltd. after producing social insurance numbers and referral slips from Canada Manpower, he said.

"Since there was no record of these documents at Manpower, they were obviously forged or obtained under the counter, similar to what is happening in Toronto."

Fred Bryan, executive director of the association for dental technology and chairman of the committee of dental technicians, has denied charges by dentists that technicians are selling directly to the public without supervision by dentists.

MP Asks Probe Cover Hamilton

HAMILTON (CP) — Duncan Battle, Progressive Conservative member of Parliament for Hamilton Mountain, said Monday an RCMP investigation that uncovered illegal work permits held by immigrants in Toronto should be extended to Hamilton.

"I think there is an indication of a similar racket in Hamilton," Mr. Battle said, referring to the case of three Guyanese men who were deported last week after obtaining work using fictitious names.

Two of the Guyanese were hired by National Sea Products Corp. Ltd. after producing social insurance numbers and referral slips from Canada Manpower, he said.

"Since there was no record of these documents at Manpower, they were obviously forged or obtained under the counter, similar to what is happening in Toronto."

TTC Subsidy Studied

TORONTO (CP) — Transportation Minister John Rhodes declined to say in the legislature Monday whether the province will increase its subsidy to the Toronto Transit Commission (TTC) to avert a proposed fare increase.

A number of discussions are in progress "and I don't think I can give you a direct answer at this time," Mr. Rhodes said in reply to questions by New Democratic Party leader Stephen Lewis.

The TTC estimates its 1974 deficit will be $33 million and Paul Godfrey, Metropolitan Toronto chairman, has proposed increasing basic fares to 35 cents from 30 cents beginning May 1.

Judiciary Committee Gets Jury's Report

WASHINGTON (AP) — A satchel filled with grand jury evidence goes to the House of Representatives judiciary committee inquiry into whether President Nixon should be impeached.

U.S. District Judge John Sirica, who described the material as "bearing on matters within the primary jurisdiction of the committee in its current inquiry", said he will turn the evidence over to the committee at 8:30 a.m. EST.

The grand jury gave Sirica a sealed envelope and the satchel March 1, the same day it indicted seven former administration and campaign aides for allegedly trying to block the investigation of the Watergate break-in.

Lawyers for two of the defendants, H. R. Haldeman and Gordon Strachan, tried to have Sirica's order reversed on the grounds that once given to a congressional committee, the contents of the report would leak out and possibly prejudice the cover-up trial.

The appeals court said such contentions were "premature at the least." The court said such claims should be raised on what has actually happened rather than on what might occur.

Sirica said the report "draws no accusatory conclusions.

"It renders no moral or social judgments. The report is a simple and straightforward compilation of information gathered by the grand jury, and no more."

Albert said he did not want the impeachment inquiry to turn into an adversary confrontation between the executive and legislative.

Dean Insists Mitchell Enquired About Vesco

NEW YORK (AP) — Deposed White House counsel John Dean has rejected a defence suggestion that it was John Ehrlichman rather than former attorney-general John Mitchell who frequently inquired through him about the Robert Vesco financial affairs.

Under cross-examination in federal court, the 35-year-old Dean was asked about a telephone call he said he made at Mitchell's behest:

"Are you certain it was not Ehrlichman who asked you to make the call?"

"Yes, I am," replied Dean. He and Ehrlichman both lost top-level White House posts in the aftermath of the Watergate scandal, which was not mentioned at the trial here. Ehrlichman had been President Nixon's chief domestic affairs adviser.

Dean was scheduled to testify again today at the criminal conspiracy trial of Mitchell and former commerce secretary Maurice Stans.

Mitchell and Stans are accused of lobbying with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) fraud investigation of Vesco's multi-million dollar corporate empire, in return for the latter's secret $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

Dean said a March 20, 1971, telephone call with Mitchell took place less than two months before a grand jury indicted Mitchell and Stans, apparently intending to show that a conspiracy to obstruct justice still was under way at the time.

"Mr. Mitchell called me and said he had been before the grand jury," Dean said.

He said Dean gave him a bellyache grilling and . . . he also told me it was a runaway grand jury and suggested I take action."

Mr. Mitchell said, 'John, you'd better call your friend, Dick Kleindienst, and tell him what's going on.'

"I called Kleindienst and I said, 'Dick, for what it's worth, I got a call from John Mitchell and he said he had gone before the grand jury in the southern district of New York and he said they were all over him and he wanted me to relay that to you. He said it was a runaway grand jury.'"

A runaway grand jury is one that refuses to be guided by the prosecutor who is presenting evidence to it.

Richard Kleindienst succeeded Mitchell when the latter quit as attorney-general Feb. 15, 1972, to head the Nixon re-election campaign. The grand jury referred to was the one that indicted Mitchell and Stans May 10, 1972, on charges of conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury. There was no indication at that point in Dean's testimony that Kleindienst had interfered in any way.

If you are an employee, and the total of your Canada Pension Plan contributions was more than $90 last year, you have a credit coming.

Last year, more errors occurred in the calculation of Canada Pension Plan overpayments than in anything else. (They even beat out arithmetic errors which almost always come in first.)

So, Since something obviously went wrong somewhere, this year we want to see if we can clear up some of the confusion.

The information below will help you when you're doing your own CPP calculations, so clip it and use it for reference when your own income Tax Day comes.

You say it paid more than $90, I have a credit coming, but how do I know what I did pay?

By your T4 slips, Box D. If you have more than one T4 slip, add up the separate amounts in all Box Ds, to get the total you paid. If you have only one, that's the figure you use.

Where do I calculate whether or not I overpaid?

The first line reads "Total Contributory Earnings per T4 slips, maximum $5,850". What does that mean?

Look on your T4 slip in Box J. If box J is blank, use the figure in Box C, just as it says on your T4. Enter that amount on the first line.

If you have more than one T4 slip, and the totals in Box J (or Box C) add up to more than $5,850, ignore that, and just enter $5,850. $5,850 is the maximum figure you contribute on, no matter what you earned.

My employer gave me a T4 slip which has one figure in Box C and a smaller figure in Box J. Why?

It's likely you became 18 or 70 years old during the year, or received a retirement or a disability pension from the CPP in 1973. In that case, you should use the figure in Box J for CPP calculations. (In other words, only a portion of the income shown in Box C of your T4 slip will be considered for CPP purposes.) Be sure to check your Guide, items 24A and 24B.

It's exactly what it says. Deduct $600 from the amount you entered above. No matter what you earned or contributed, that amount is the same: $600. It's standard. (The only exception to this are those who turned either 18 or 70 years old in 1973, or received a CPP Pension in 1973. Check your Guide—item 24D.)

Then it says "Equals: Earnings Subject to Contribution (maximum $5,000)".

That figure is the one you get when you deduct the $600 from your Contributory Earnings on the first line. It can't be more than $5,000 because maximum Contributory Earnings can't exceed $5,600 and you've just deducted $600 from that amount.

Fine. Now it says "Total Contributions deducted per Box D on all T4 slips".

Look at your T4 slip again, Box D. The amount shown there is the amount you enter on that line. Again, if you have more than one T4 slip, add up the total of all Box Ds and enter it.

So far, so good. But this is where I get confused: "Less required contribution—1.8% of earnings subject to contribution at amount of Contribution Table, maximum $90".

Fortunately that statement is much less confusing than it sounds. The key word is OR, so take the easy way and ignore the 1.8%. (They both come out the same.) Look in your Tax Guide to find, back to the "Employee's CPP Contribution Table" and look on the chart to find your "Earnings as a CPP Contribution Table" and look on the chart to find your "Earnings Subject to Contribution" which you now know. Right beside it as a figure telling you how much you should have paid. Enter that figure (and it can't be higher than $90, because that's as much as you can contribute on) on that line.

Now where?

If there is a difference, take that last figure and do exactly what the return tells you to do with it. Enter the amount on Line 23 of Page 2 of your return, and again on Line 49 of Page 1.

That's it.

No, we've done it.

What if my calculations show that I owe the Government more for CPP?

That may be your employer's error. If so, we'll have him correct it. Do not pay the amount. Attach a note, bringing the error to our attention, and we'll contact him directly. Don't worry about it.

Hold on. I was self-employed part of last year, what do I do?

In that case, if your contributory earnings from employment and self-employment were more than $5,600 last year (if it didn't, don't bother), you'll need to fill in the bottom part of Page 3 labelled "Canada Pension Plan Contributions on Self-Employed Earnings". It's just as easy. An you'll find full instructions for that in your Guide, Item 24C.

I'm sorry, but I'm still a little mixed-up.

Follow April Aid. Read your Guide. Then re-read this ad.

If it's still hazy, phone or drop by your District Taxation office. We'll be glad to give you all the help you need.

One more thing . . .

Please check your arithmetic. And re-check. Every time there's a re-set a small error, the computers reject your return and it has to be checked and corrected by hand, then cycled through the computer again.

Not only does it hold up the completion of your return, but every error, no matter how small, is expensive, to correct.

DONE!

Together, we can get it done.

Discover The Delight Of Sewing Your Own Dresses

Look at ready-made dresses on the rack . . .

Then pick up some fabric and a pattern . . .

And make your own, like Debbie did !

Story by Debbie Hansen

Photos by Betsy Parks

Browsing through the store, you suddenly feel yourself drawn to the dress rack. Your eye's been caught by the most gorgeous spring frock and you know you have to have it.

But as your hand turns the price-tag over, all visions of you ever wearing the dress vanish forever!

Fortunately, there is an alternative.

For many women, the rising cost of clothing acts as an incentive to sew their own.

But not everyone follows that incentive all the way to the material and patterns department.

"Oh, I haven't got time."

"No sewing is too hard."

Too bad, these excuses just don't stand up anymore. You can easily sew dress that will suit you perfectly in almost no time at all.

Here are a few tips to make your first attempts as pleasant as possible.

Keep in mind when you select a pattern that a simple "basic" style is easier to sew and usually looks nice too. Wait till you've been sewing a year or two before you try to duplicate a Paris original.

Another tip is to try on several dresses to find a style that suits you, and then buy a similar dress pattern. If you can resist the urge to buy, it will ensure you a home-made dress you'll be happy with.

Designers for the leading pattern companies have created, for the impatient or beginning sewer, dresses that are made of just two main pieces.

There are patterns designed especially to make you look thinner, patterns that can be "whipped-up" in a matter of hours, patterns to be created from double-knit fabrics that sew up quickly and give a good fit.

Most ready-made dresses are of material that can be found in any of the local sewing centres. There are a variety of fabrics to choose from - anything from cotton gingham at $1.39 per yard to rayon and polyester blends at $2.98 per yard.

The more exotic fabrics are naturally more costly, and in most cases, if you want your dress made specifically of an expensive material, you may be wiser to buy the dress already made. It will hurt your pocketbook and pride a lot more if you ruin good cloth during your first sewing attempts!

But there's no need to ruin anything if you start with one of the "easy-to-sew" patterns available from all the pattern Simplicity 5843, shown in the the photograph.

It was made from double-knit polyester imported from Germany at $4.98 per yard. (This material is now on sale for $2.98 per yard - one of the chief advantages of sewing your own is that you can nab bargains like this.)

The cost of two and a half yards of the material at the original price was $13.66. Interfacing cost one dollar, buttons were 49 cents, thread was 60 cents and tape cost 40 cents. The total cost: $16.

The total time spent in making the dress was 24 hours, the better part of one weekend. Not bad when you consider that the equivalent dress in a store costs $38.

With the money you save in sewing your own spring dress, you can add accessories to your wardrobe and still be ahead in the fashion game.

There's another bonus, of course.

That's the feeling of achievement, and the pride you'll have in a dress that gets compliments that you've made yourself.

Education Can Defeat Diabetes

OTTAWA (CP) — When Shelly Donaldson was eight years old she began losing weight. She felt ill and tired all the time and her doctor first attributed her condition to congenital allergic reactions.

She continued to lose weight and finally went to hospital. Tests revealed a blood-sugar count of 700 compared with the normal 80 to 120. Shelly was diabetic.

The Donaldsons knew little about the disease or its treatment, aside from the fact that insulin injections were required. They didn't know where to turn for help.

Now, two years later, Shelly's mother, Beverly Donaldson, is publicity officer for the Canadian Diabetic Associations Ottawa branch, determined to help spare other parents the same anguish.

"It's not difficult to cope with diabetes if there is a full understanding and acceptance of it, she said.

Diabetic clinics at Ottawa hospitals operate on a referral basis, which means that diabetic patients must sometimes change physicians.

Books in local libraries are limited in scope and "in some cases, even dangerous, Mrs. Donaldson said.

"We had to send to the United States for material. Isn't it ironic that Canadians discovered insulin but we have to get our information from the U.S.?

"When I think of the horrors and fears—the things we believed in the beginning . . . her own insulin shots twice a day.

She also tests her own blood-sugar level three times daily. She checks her tests and plans ahead for a particularly active day.

"Attention to detail is important in controlling diabetes, Mrs. Donaldson noted. "You determine today the insulin intake for tomorrow.

Now the entire Donaldson family follows a diabetic diet—including Susan, 18, Sharon 15, and father Graham, who last fall was also diagnosed as diabetic.

"And we all eat well, said Mrs. Donaldson. "I cook and serve one meal for all of us. I could weep when mothers tell me they're tired of cooking two meals all the time.

"That's not necessary; that's because they haven't learned.

Meal-times must be strictly regulated. A diabetic must You can accept anything if you know, but I was shaky, because I didn't know.

It is often the diabetic children who are cheated by their parents lack of knowledge, Mrs. Donaldson said.

"There are too many cases in which parents are over-protective. They say 'It's so much safer if Johnny doesn't take gym classes.' I say it's so much easier.

There's even a reward for increased physical activity. Extra sugar is needed at such times so a soft drink or candy bar is allowed.

"Shelly herself says it hasn't been that much of a problem, said Mrs. Donaldson, but once a week she must go to a clinic for an allergy shot. She administers oral four times a day, at precise times.

A public education program is as essential as extended facilities for diabetics, Mrs. Donaldson said. There are just not enough data available.

Widows: Lasting Feelings of Loneliness

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — He is a city executive, married, two children, large income, social status, loving home. Laura was 21 and had been married five years when her 29-year-old husband was killed in a car accident.

She said: "The possibility of losing my husband was something I never really thought of. You think about realistic death, but not accidental."

Agnes, 71, said: "There was no question in either of our minds that he would go first. Being older, I had met death at fairly close quarters. Before

Successful Living

Work 'Best Anesthetic'

By DORIS CLARK

Arnold Toynbee suggests that work is "the sovereign anesthetic". If we work long enough and hard enough, we don't really have to look at ourselves.

And yet we need to. We need times when we can do some thinking; explore some of the thinking of our philosophers and discover what this world is really all about.

Our young people are lucky when they get opportunities to travel, to examine other cultures and meet people themselves against what they see. This will help to shape their lives. In a period when automation makes continuous work harder to find.

Let's hope it will lead them into paths of serious thought and help them to discover for themselves what the universe is all about. Maybe, even, some of their thinking will enrich not only one of us older and more compulsive workers!

Dear Doris: I understand how "It There Now" feels, as I too lost my husband at Christmas. A wonderful man whom I loved 31 years with, to be snapped away from me with very little warning! I too wondered if life was worth going on.

Perhaps if it wasn't for the wonderful people in the City of Moncton, N.B., I'd feel like that man. Tell him to keep faith in God; and to pray for other hand (long for me o do. The first job I get was just to fill the lonely hours.

According to Statistics Canada, in 1971 there were 944,920 widowed people in Canada — 732,865 of them women. Sixty five per cent of people over 65 were widowed, but there were 2,405 widows 20 to 24 years old.

One factor in the early days of widowhood for many women is that they know nothing about their husbands' finances.

Dorrsine said: "My husband was the financial aspects of our home. He took care of the bills. . . .

"I now think every woman should know how much furniture, for example, her husband has. Women should be involved in every aspect of their marriage."

Laura said: "Everyone was telling me what to do with my money. The people my husband worked for were very helpful: they told me about my will."

Laura and others said people tried to take advantage of their vulnerability and relative inexperience with money.

Three of the widows interviewed said their social lives changed. Their friends dropped them. Dorrsine and Laura said they believe it was because they didn't fit into a social pattern that was all couples and may have represented a threat to other women.

Laura works at a full-time job, takes accounting two nights a week, belongs to Parents Without Partners. She has thought of remarrying, but cannot seek friendship actively.

"Sometimes I feel older than my years.

"I have trouble making my son understand you just can't go and pick up a husband like a car. At one time I thought I'd get married again, but now I've accepted the fact I'm alone and I guess I'll always be, unless something changes."

Dorrsine dates platonically. "I did it because I was lonely. It's important that you find someone you can open up to, talk to. I still date, but many of my dates end up at home with my children because I don't like leaving them."

She has a property she and her husband used to manage together.

She said: "Life is quite similar to when my husband was alive. If I had more time, I'd do a lot more things."

Agnes said she asked her doctor what she could do to help people, and he told her the world needs good grandmothers. So she tries to keep herself available for her family.

"My family see to it that I'm rarely alone. They may have a scheme among themselves."

She suggested that a Widowed Persons Service is useful group to give a new widow help over the early crisis period.

Ann Landers

Dad Causes Heartache, Kids Hate Him Now

Dear Ann Landers: Please forgive me if you have trouble reading my letter. The ink is blurred by tears because I've been crying.

When I came home from school yesterday, my brother Billy told me the police had taken Dad to the hospital. Billy said Dad had locked himself in the bathroom, turned a bottle of whiskey, swallowed Lord knows how many pills and then broke a mirror with his fist and bled all over the place.

Billy called the police when he heard Dad moaning. They came over right away, took the door down and carried Dad to the hospital in the squad car. Mom was at work and Billy decided not to frighten her.

Today the doctor said Dad might live, but I don't know if we will ever get over hating him for all the heartache and fears he has caused our family. Please help us handle this. — N.Y. Trouble

Dear N.Y.: Your dad is a very sick man. You and your brother should thank God he is alive to stand his illness before you become sick from hating him.

Your sad letter proves you know about Alateen, the wonderful organization for teenagers whose parents have a drinking problem. Ask Mom (or Mrs.) to discuss it with you and send for their literature. You and your brother should attend the Alateen meetings together. It could change your lives, and your future's, too.

Dear Ann Landers: I came home from work early the other afternoon, sooner than expected. When I walked into the living room I found my 11-year-old son masturbating. I backed out immediately because he didn't know if I should speak to him, ignore it, lecture him or what. Now that I know he is indulging in this despicable habit what should I do? I am frightened to death because I don't know if he already has harmful

Bad Planning Spoils Wardrobes

NEW YORK (AP) — Bit by bit we demand the rights of the individual over the use of his own body and one of these rights is that of dying with dignity, said Marya Mannes, author of Last Rights: A Case for the Good Death.

And the way to achieve it, she added, is through euthanasia, which translated from the Greek means "a good death." "It's entirely voluntary; nobody is going to impose it on you," said Miss Mannes, who during her research in terminal wards saw "people who were really only half alive, who had no joy in life and were being kept alive by artificial means."

"Most people of sound mind, if they could imagine themselves strung up to tubes and wires and machines indefinitely would say no, but they have no choice. It seems that as we invent miraculous machines and doctors become technicians, the tendency for too many years has been to use them just for prolongation—of what?"

The real question, she said, is what is life? "Should the life in a body decide, with all vably damaged organs, a brain in a coma, that has no reasonable prospects ever to return to health, "be extended?"

Miss Mannes, who reluctantly undertook to write the book at the suggestion of her publishers, said her own fear of death dispelled her to take the wraps off the subject.

"I came out, strangely enough, much less fearful of death when I started. I still have fear of the kind of dying I don't want but don't think I can face now.

"I wanted to open up the dialogue about death, to show people it is not the enemy. I will.

There has been such a taboo in our culture. We used euphemisms like 'passed away' and children are not permitted to see their dead parents. They should become acquainted with what is, after all, an inevitable event. It shouldn't be cosmeticized and hidden."

The author, who spent months "going through 2,000 years of material" interviewed doctors and psychiatrists and visited nursing homes. She saw inadequate care units "where they keep the organs alive in people who from various causes are very near death."

Miss Mannes differentiated between doing nothing to prolong life and mercy killing, which she said is illegal for whatever benevolent reason it takes a life.

She saw a need for similar decisions at the other end of life—saying that "the right to choose whether or not to have a baby has brain damage or deformity.

"In this case, shouldn't the mother and doctor have the right to decide, with all the implications in mind? Wouldn't it be an act of mercy for the deformed life to be released rather than to let the child face a tragic existence—I don't even want to call it life?"

Miss Mannes said she hopes there eventually may be a law to cover mercy killings that are clearly compassionate and where the patient was going to die anyway in a matter of weeks.

Meanwhile, she cited as encouraging the fact that last year more than 50,000 Americans wrote the Euthanasia Educational Fund in New York for copies of A Living Will.

Lighthouse Life Brings Perfect Peace

VICTORIA, B.C. (CP) — Lighthouse life beats city living, especially for those living in remote localities on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

"Life is so fast-paced in the city, but people never seem to get anywhere," said Fred Elder, 31, who lives with her husband and two children in Nootka Island Lighthouse station, 160 miles northwest of Victoria. "Here you have time to think."

Mrs. Elder said she loves the lighthouse lifestyle. We read, we talk and waiter-sail and go camping. And in the summer we have plenty of tourists who want to know how we stand it.

There are 12 people, including two boys, in Esteval Point lighthouse and weather station, about midway up the west coast of the island.

Charlie Gibbens, 25, does maintenance work on the lighthouse and is also a skilled radiotelephone. He uses only mahogany planks that float off reefs in the waters off Japan and float across the Pacific. "It's a bit expensive, and here I have the time to do it," he said.

Mrs. Gibbens, 24, doubles as teacher or her two children who like their surroundings without friends. "I'm leary of. "But I don't like Halloween," says Jamie, 7.

Shopping without a weekly trip by the supermarket "is just something you get used to," said Elaine Gibbens, 25, wife of chief meteorologist Stu Wood.

People on the 33 lighthouse, radio and lifesaving stations along the rugged coast of Vancouver Island must give weekly shopping list to the coast guard ship Camsell on its monthly supply trip.

"You learn to be careful when making out a grocery list," said Mrs. Wood. "I don't miss the department stores. When I go on holidays I go wild in them for a few days. Then they get boring."

Head lighthouse man Jim Barr, 61, went to Esteval Point because there were no other jobs available and grew to like it. "I thought I'd settle down and let retirement catch up to me," he said.

Dave Watson, 27, is bachelor, likes the hunting and fishing. "I finish work and trot off with my rod 30 feet away," he said. As for social life, he gets a month's holiday a year. "and I make up for the lot then (in Victoria)."

Farther north on Kyuquot Sound, about 300 miles northwest of Victoria, is Cape Mudalena. 22, also a bachelor, works on the Scarlett Island radio station. He likes scuba diving, which he practises year-round. "It's been the water is clear and full of life," he said. "You can see 60 feet ahead."

Arts Centre Ticket Prices Get a Boost

OTTAWA — Bruce Corder, acting director general of the National Arts Centre, has announced the first increase in the Centre's ticket prices since its opening in 1969.

The increases, effective for the 1974-75 season, affect all NAC productions and subscription series, including the National Arts Centre Orchestra and English and French Theatre series.

Mr. Corder said during the five-year period in which prices have remained constant, cost of materials, services and wages have risen considerably. The Centre is alleviating the ticket price structure to meet these rising costs.

"In the past three months alone, the price of cotton from which scenery is made has risen 46 per cent and the price of lumber by 12 percent. Even with the planned ticket increases for the next season the National Arts Centre's prices will continue to increase favorably with those found in other major centres in Canada. This season, minimum prices in other centres range from $2.50 to $4.50, while next season the Centre will offer an Orchestra concert or a play at the theatre for a minimum price of $2.50.

Actual increases range from 25 cents to $1, depending upon the attraction and the seat purchased. For the NAC Orchestra Family Series, children's prices for the six concerts will increase from $0 to $1.00, an increase of approximately 25 cents per concert. For the regular Orchestra series, the range of tickets currently $2 - $5, will be increased to $2.50 - $6, with the current practice of $1 extra for visiting orchestras being maintained. English and French Theatre tickets will increase between 75 cents and $1. Subscription prices will rise accordingly, but subscribers will continue to obtain a minimum 15 per cent discount, along with other benefits such as reserving tickets for any NAC performance by telephone.

Bronfman Collection At National Gallery

OTTAWA — In 1971, the National Gallery of Canada received an important group of 27 master drawings given by Mrs. Samuel Bronfman, in honor of her late husband Samuel Bronfman, formerly of Montreal, whose philanthropic contributions to numerous voluntary organizations over many years included a number devoted to the arts.

These drawings will be on public view at the National Gallery, in a special exhibition on the third floor, from April 20 until June 16. The exhibition will be opened officially on April 19.

The Bronfman Gift of Drawings exhibition includes Italian and French drawings, dating from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries. It includes an appealing group of drawings by the Venetian eighteenth - century artists Giovanni Battista Tiepolo and his son, Giovanni Domenico. A group of early portraits is given by the French nineteenth-century artist, Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec are also part of the gift from Mrs. Bronfman.

The drawings join the generous gifts and bequests to the National Gallery which began in 1880, when the Royal Canadian Academy had its first exhibition in Ottawa. Each member donated one of his works as the beginning of a permanent national collection.

The Bronfman Gift of Drawings exhibition will be shown integrated with a selection of related drawings from the National Gallery's permanent collection. The selection will include drawings by Canaletto, Tiepolo, Tintoretto, Guardi, Piranesi's Fantastic Interiors and a number of drawings by Giovanni Battista Tiepolo and a few French and Italian seventeenth century drawings in complement to the Bronfman gift.

A fully illustrated catalogue by Dr. Carol Taylor, curator of drawings at the National Gallery, is being published in conjunction with The Bronfman Gift of Drawings. The exhibition is being offered to galleries and art museums across Canada on a limited tour after the exhibition closes in Ottawa.

Comedie-Francaise Returning to Centre

OTTAWA — The National Arts Centre Theatre will be no place for grumbers from April 1 to 6, when the Comedie-Francaise returns, back with a show especially made for people who cry only from laughing.

The capacity 8,000-odd theatregoers who recently saw "Le Malade Imaginaire" are one testimony to the Comedie-Francaise's talent to amuse. At the April performances the company presents two uproarious comedies: Eugene Labiche's La Station Champbaudet, followed by Mais N'te Promene Donc Pas Toute Nue, a piece of pure vaudeville by Georges Feydeau.

La Station Champbaudet is one of the greatest laugh shows that Paris has known for years, and played to sold-out houses. Francoise Seigner (who played Thérèse in "Le Malade Imaginaire") will be Madame Champbaudet, the middle-class, coquettish widow who, at 40 years old, is completely infatuated by an unimportant young architect (Philippe Rondet). Among the other principal actors will be Paule Noelle, Jacques Eyser and Michel Etcheverry. There are lots of musical numbers, and the accompaniment will be provided by a seven-piece band under the direction of Alain Margoni.

Mais n'te Promene Donc Pas Toute Nue takes the stage in the second half of the program. The heroine of this irresistibly funny play is the wife of a rich Parliamentary deputy, who makes a habit of parading about in the abscence of sheer nightdresses even when her husband is entertaining important visitors. Jacques Charon is the husband who comes close to disaster, almost having a heart attack because of his wife's misbehaviour. Alain Feydeau plays the part of the journalist, Jarret in this comedy written by his grandfather.

Anne Murray Repeats As Top Female Singer

TOONTO (CP) — Canada paid tribute to its stars Monday in a ceremony that has come to represent a milestone in the lives of many Canadian singers, songwriters and musicians.

A surprise among the 25 awards presented was the outing of Gordon Lightfoot and Bruce Cockburn from the Canadian folksinger section. This time, Valdy, a one-time farmer from British Columbia whose popularity has increased rapidly during 1973, won the honor.

Another popular Canadian folksinger, Murray McLaughan was awarded the James Juno and bit tune The Farmer Song, one of Valdy's hits, and another as best country music single.

Canadian group of the year was the Toronto band Lighthouse. The award for the outstanding group of the year went to Bachman-Turner Overdrive, a a band which rode the charts for many weeks in 1973 with Blue Collar.

In the country music section, Stompin' Tom Connors was awarded a Juno as best country male vocalist and Shirley Eikhard took the women's country vocalist honor. Country group of the year was the Mercey Brothers.

Among awards presented to the record industries, Warner-Elektra-Asylum was named record company of the year. The best album award went to Backman Turner-Overdrive for B.T.O with the final award, for best Canadian composer, was presented to Murray McLaughlan.

The 2½ hour ceremony was opened by Walt Grealis, publisher of the music publication, RPM, and co-founder of the Junos. RPM conducts polls among its readers to select the Juno winners.

When the Junos began, Grealis said, "we were attempting to mould a star system in a country that lacked stars. Now we have stars and a star system to support it."

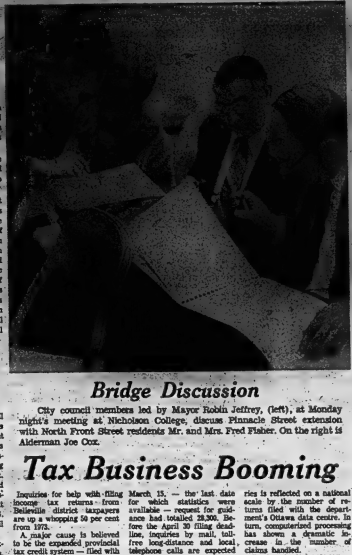
Board Session Short

In its shortest session on record, Hastings county board of education wrapped up its business in 30 minutes Monday night.

Trustees met in committee of the whole for an equal length of time afterward to discuss personnel matters.

The board heard that superintendent E.T. Morris had been invited to join the International Society of Educational Planners, an organization concerned with population studies and school financing on both sides of the border. Since the inception of the county board, Mr. Morris has become known for his charts and graphs on population trends, pupil enrolment and educational costs in the Hastings area.



59 Cases On Docket

There are a total of 36 civil non-jury cases, eight cases calling for judicial assessment and 15 county court appeals on the trial list, released yesterday, for the spring sitting of the Hastings County Court.

The court docket, released by the County Court Registrar's office, lists cases that will be heard by Judge G. F. Smith commencing April 1.

Judge Smith's court, expected to sit for three weeks, will pass judgement on a total of 22 cases involving claims under the Motor Vehicle Act.

There are also eight appeals from the County's provincial criminal courts and three appeals from the provincial family court listed on the docket.

Bridge Discussion

Tax Business Booming

Inquiries for help with filing income tax returns from Belleville district taxpayers are up a whopping 50 per cent from 1973.

A major cause is believed to be the expanded provincial tax credit system — filed with federal returns. This year provincial benefits have been extended to most Ontario residents, particularly senior citizens.

Inquiries now are running close to 40,000 since the beginning of the year, an official at National Revenue's Belleville district taxation office estimated Monday. Up to March 15, — the last date for which statistics were available — request for guidance had totalled 29,300. Before the April 30 filing deadline, inquiries by mail, toll-free long-distance and local telephone calls are expected to reach 60,000, said information officer John Lossen.

At present the flow of requests for advice has slackened. The end of March and early April traditionally see a temporary tapering-off before a final spurt in the last weeks before deadline, said the official.

The volume of local inquiries is reflected on a national scale by the number of returns up to March 15 at the department's Ottawa data centre. In turn, computerized processing has shown a dramatic decrease in the number of claims handled.

To March 21, 4,079,000 returns had been received in Ottawa — up nearly a million from last year.

Returns assessed were 1,516,00, compared to almost 600,000 in 1973. Refunds have totalled almost $255,000,000 compared to slightly less than $87,300,000 for the same period last year.

The Belleville district taxation office administers a region reaching from Napanee to Bowmanville and north to the Peterborough area.

$885 Theft Investigated

The OPP reports that thieves entered a home on the Second Concession of Sidney Township, just west of Wall-bridge Road, some time during the day yesterday and stole a cassette player, a record player, a Remington rifle with scope, some stereo headphones and an oscilloscope.

Entry is believed to have been gained by slipping the lock on a back door.

Hoping to Quit

There are 18 frantic people in Belleville today who may be a little more irritable than normal. They are all participants in a five-day stop-smoking program that is being held at the Belleville General Hospital. The stop-smoking program, presented jointly by the Hastings - Prince Edward Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association and the Seventh Day Adventist Church, is designed to help people who want to kick the smoking habit by providing them with an organized withdrawal program.

Last night, Mr. and Mrs. Merrill Dales, two of the program's organizers, were prepared to accept registration forms from anyone who was interested in joining the program. The course continues until Thursday.

Rednersville May Get Post Office

The hamlet of Rednersville on the south shore of the Bay of Quinte in Prince Edward county may again have its own post office.

That is the word from Belleville postmaster W.B. Wainwright, who said today that a survey of householders in the immediate Rednersville area is now being taken to determine if they would approve of the change.

The proposal is to establish a post office at the village with a rural mail carrier to serve households in the outlying area. Part of the routes now covered by RR 1 Belleville and RR 1 Carrying Place would be served by the new Rednersville route.

Reason for the proposed change, according to Mr. Wainwright, is a desire on the part of the postal department to improve service.

Approximately 400 householders in the Rednersville area would be affected by the change, but before a decision is made, a majority of the householders would have to approve.

The householders have until May 1 to reply.

If a majority are in favor of the change, Mr. Wainwright said advertisements would be placed for a Rednersville post office site and also for a rural postal carrier.

About 70 people living within a quarter of a mile of new post office would have to go to the office to get their mail.

Now, too many present-day area residents may remember but Rednersville at one time did have a post office.

One resident who does remember is Ralph Stafford, now 92, who has lived in the village since 1905.

He remembers the former post office well, which he said was operated from the village store.

Pinnacle Bridge Plan Meets Little Opposition

By ROY PEACOCK
Staff Reporter

Residents of the North Front Street area immediately north of the Moira River got their first close look Monday night at plans for the Pinnacle Street extension and while more than a dozen buildings will come down to make way for the project, there was little real objection.

Approximately 30 area residents — several of whom will lose their homes when the work gets under way — turned up for the public meeting at Nicholson Catholic College and heard Dave Babbe, of the consulting firm Totten, Simms and Hubbell, outline plans for the roadway extension and new bridge over the Moira.

The proposal calls for a new six-lane bridge over the Moira with the roadway extension joining North Front Street at a point midway between Grove and Strachan Streets.

Mr. Babbe told his audience that the recommended plan was one of several explored by his firm after being retained by the city to do a north-south arterial road study aimed at improving traffic conditions between the downtown area and the north end of the city.

He said the study showed most motorists desired to cross the river in the vicinity of the Upper Bridge to get to their destinations and also that in rush hour periods the bridge was already being used 20 per cent over capacity.

Projected 20-year traffic volumes indicated that the number of cars in the Upper Bridge area would double.

A new bridge over the river and the extension of Pinnacle Street to join North Front was considered to be the best answer to the problem.

Current plans call for the over-all project to be completed in two stages with the bridge to be constructed in 1976 and roadway extension the following year.

Total cost of the two-stage project is estimated at $1,787,000 of which the city's share would be $587,805.

Mr. Babbe said of the several plans considered the one recommended had the best street alignment, would achieve the best results and would cost the least.

Completion of the project would see traffic patterns in the area change.

Pinnacle Street would become a two-way street, while Moira Street east from Coleman would be one-way eastbound and Grove and Harriett Streets one-way westbound.

Hugh O'Neil, owner of an East Moira Street apartment house, wondered about the noise factor with the Pinnacle Street extension passing the building.

He said the apartment had been built on Moira Street because it was a quiet residential area.

Another resident wanted to know when property acquisition by the city would commence.

City Engineer Wilbur Purcell said property purchases should commence soon as all properties required had to be in city hands before tenders could be called.

However, he said actual construction would not be required this year. The two properties required for the first stage bridge construction would be needed by next April.

Properties for the roadway extension south of the river would be needed some time next summer to allow Bell Telephone to do necessary work before actual road construction commences.

And still another resident living east of Bridge Front Street wondered about traffic patterns when local streets become one-way.

He was told that unfortunately some residents might have to go a bit out of their way to get where they wanted to go.

Nickel Dispenser Popular Downtown

Except goodwill.

The 21-year-old is a meter maid. But with this difference: She watches for cars in parking spaces where meters have run out. Then, instead of producing a penalty parking ticket, she puts a nickel in the meter and leaves a courtesy card on the windshield.

Linda is part of a $5,000 goodwill scheme launched by the Downtown Management Area board to encourage more people into the commercial core.

"The idea is to save people the aggravation of possibly getting a ticket for overdue parking when they come downhere," says Alderman Roger Porter, board chairman. "We don't want people having the idea if they're late getting back to the meter they've got a ticket for sure."

The idea isn't exactly original, the alderman conceded. In fact, it was first mentioned by the daughter of a fellow city councillor who came across it in another Canadian city.

In Belleville, the board — a co-operative effort between businessmen and council, funded by an annual $25,000 extra levy paid by downtown business — started a trial run during the Christmas season. It proved workable, so Linda was hired on a full-time basis three weeks ago to patrol downtown parking areas 30 hours a week.

So far, she's undertaken with zest. During a day she drops 80-100 nickels in time-expired meters and confesses to chagrin if she finds a parking ticket has made it ahead of her.

Her competitors are the city's meter readers, who have the task of policing the meters — and often running public indignation. But, it's not really a rivalry.

In fact, the wardens seem to take a fatherly interest in her well-being, officials Linda.

"They're all really great. They've given me advice on how to pace myself on the job, even suggesting I wear insoles in my shoes for all the walking."

The first day I was on the job I caught a cold. One of them gave me cough drops."

Linda's assignment allows her personal discretion. If she believes a motorist is consciously taking advantage of the plan she can judge her distribution of nickels accordingly.

Downtown employees won't benefit.

After three weeks "I know all the cars now belonging to people working downtown," says Linda.

Motorists often mistake the courtesy card for a parking ticket — with the standard annoyed reaction. But when they learn the truth "they leave with a big smile."

One man . . . driving a Cadillac . . . was so impressed he gave me a dollar tip.

Ald. Porter says out-of-town visitors have called on the Chamber of Commerce — through which the board employs Linda — to show appreciation for the plan.

"It's hard to get comments on this sort of thing," he says." But it seems to be working well. I think we'll just keep it going."

Bridge St. Parking Brings Complaint

Parking along the north side of Bridge Street between Church Street and MacDonald Ave. could become a thing of the past if the complaint of an area resident is acted upon.

Mayor Robin Jeffrey told the city traffic and light committee Monday that an East Hill resident had complained of cars being continually parked in her area and requested some sort of action.

Parking on the south side of Bridge Street between Church is now prohibited.

The committee referred the matter to the police department which will report back following investigation.

And parking on both sides of Bridge Road opposite the Four Seasons Hotel could soon be prohibited.

The matter has been discussed by the traffic committee on several occasions in the past but was reintroduced Monday by Alderman George Zegouras, who said parking on both sides of the road could result in a dangerous situation.

A fire truck could never get through in an emergency, he said.

City police have already trailed for one-side-parking on the street and Police Chief D.T. Crosbie said his recommendation would be reintroduced to the committee.

Alderman Paul Russell reported the caretaker of a school guard at the corner of Harder Drive and Palmer Road where a new housing subdivision is resulting in more children crossing Palmer Road on their way to school.

The two complaints were referred to the police department for checking.

Special Olympics Get Board Support

Hastings county board of education Monday night gave its support to the 1974 Canadian Special Olympics for the Retarded, to be held in Winnipeg, June 13 to 16.

The board gave $577 toward the more than $8,000 needed to send about 55 children, chaperons and coaches to the event. The money comes from the schools' supplies and services budget.

Schools concerned are L'Amable, near Bancroft, Bridgewater School at Actinolite and William R. Kirk School in Belleville. Several adults from the ARC Industries at L'Amble, Trenton and Belleville and delegates from Harvey School east of Napanee will travel with the Hastings county contingent.

Goal of the Olympics is to create opportunities for sport training, athletic participation and recreational activities for all mentally retarded children and adults.

Cost is about $175 a participant, including transportation, accomodation and meals.

A local elimination meet will be held on May 2 at William R. Kirk School in Belleville.

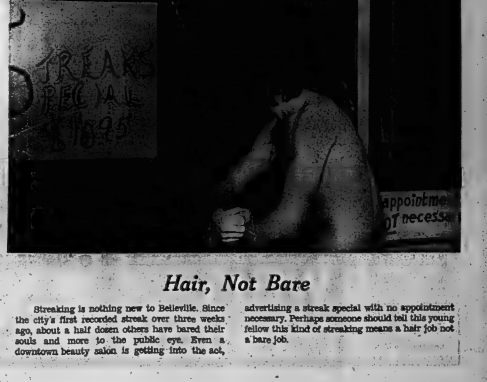
The school's concerned have been active in raising funds for the project since September. Contributors can donate by contacting the schools.

Alarm Box

Belleville firefighters responded to the following call for assistance during the 24-hour period ending Tuesday at 8 a.m.:

Monday, March 25, smoke investigation at 507 Sidney St., overheated fan on furnace motor, no damage, 8.11 p.m.

Labor Council Sought Grant



A Quinte District Labor Council representative has applied to Belleville city council for a $12,000 grant to fund Citizens Bureau operation here once Local Initiative Program monies run out in Trenton in mid-summer.

In a story published in The Intelligencer Friday, March 22, it was incorrectly reported the Citizens Bureau had applied for the grant.

Volunteers Tour Hospital

Volunteers working for the Cancer Society in Hastings and Prince Edward Counties toured Princess Margaret Hospital in Toronto this weekend.

The invitation, which came through the Belleville Unit of the Canadian Cancer Society, was also extended to nurses from the local hospitals, the VON and the county health unit.

Hair, Not Bare

Streaking is nothing new to Belleville. Since the city's first recorded streak over three weeks ago, about a half dozen others have bared their souls and more to the public eye. Even a downtown beauty salon is getting into the act, advertising a streak special with no appointment necessary. Perhaps someone should tell this young fellow this kind of streaking means a hair job not a bare job.

Mathematically Eliminated

Knights Come Up Flat

CHERRY HILL, N.J. (AP) — New Jersey Knights were mathematically eliminated from the World Hockey Association playoffs Monday night, and didn't even go down fighting.

"I don't think we came at them strong enough for an important game like this," said player-coach Harry Howell. "Any time you have only 14 shots, you're not playing aggressive hockey."

Goalie Ian Wilkie, who played with the New Jersey franchise last year when it was known as New York Raiders, stopped 11 of those shots in the Edmonton net as the Oilers took a 4-1 victory.

It was the only WHA game of the night, and the Oilers move on to visit Chicago Cougars in tonight's playoff game.

Wilkie, who played with the Los Angeles Sharks earlier this season, felt little pressure playing his second game with the Oilers.

"It was quite easy," Wilkie said. "They just didn't seem to come at us. This was the least number of shots taken against me in a while."

It was Wilkie's first appearance against his former teammates and he seemed to appreciate which end of the ice he was on.

"I was awfully nice to beat them."

"We just didn't seem to penetrate them," Kerr said. "We missed a lot of chances on power plays. They seemed to have our number all year."

The Oilers, who have beaten the Knights in five of their six meetings, stalled Wilkie to a 2-0 lead on a first-period goal by Bob McKendzie and second-period scores from Doug Barrie and Ian Lando, his 29th.

Wayne Rivers spoiled Wilkie's shutout bid at 5:44 of the third period, and Dan Oliver Ross Perkins poked in a shot with 26 seconds left in the game to complete the scoring.

The victory gave the Oilers a 3-0 breathing room in the West Division standings, a four-point lodge over fourth-place Winnipeg Jets. Edmonton also has two games in hand.

Alberta Leads The Way

WINNIPEG (CP) — Skip Ed Stewart says his New Brunswick rink has made its share of errors at the Canadian curling championship but "mine and Wilke's aren't bad if you don't let the ends go by."

Stewart, third Petty Pierre, second Jim Pierce and lead Ruby Sterenberg although not sharp Monday, produced the key shots to beat Saskatchewan's Ron Rae rink 9-6 and remain in the only unbeaten rink.

Their 4-0 record gets its toughest test today, however, when they meet Jim Marshall and Alberta.

"It was a struggle tonight, we didn't curl all that well . . . We'll have to curl better tomorrow as well as better," said Stewart, 36, a Moncton chiropractor.

"We've made some tough shots, but we've missed some easy ones, too. Let the breaks have about evened themselves out."

Rick Folk of Saskatoon and Ron Northcott of Saskatchewan crew beat Newfoundland 13-4 in the fourth round to remain in second place at 3-1 record. Manitoba, Alberta and Northern Ontario are next at 2-1.

Wolfpack Scores A First

GREENSBORO N.C. (AP) — Led by David Thompson with 21 points, North Carolina State won its first national basketball title Monday night, defeating Marquette 76-64 in the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship.

Rangers' Big Line Producing Again

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

New York's veteran Gag Line has finally taken off its gags and started to score it by earnest again. And with the Rangers a game down in the race for second place with only six games to play, it wasn't a moment too soon.

The Rangers had won only two of their previous eight games, but appeared to snap the slump Sunday night with a strong performance against Buffalo Sabres. Rod Gilbert says he knows why. He and his linemates are talking again.

They weren't having a tiff, the 32-year-old right winger said after scoring two goals to spearhead a 5-3 victory; it's just that Jean Ratelle weren't talking enough on the ice.

"We just communicated (silent code) with each other where we are. When a guy's carrying the puck he may lose track of the other forwards. The only way he's going to find out where we are is if we tell him."

But Sunday they were "going good . . . talking to each other constantly out there," and Gilbert got his 30th and 31st goals of the season to become the first Ranger to score 300 career goals.

He said the standing ovation the second goal earned him was "really touching," but personal achievement doesn't matter to me."

"We have to go all the way and win the Stanley Cup."

The Rangers are to become the playoffs for sure, but nothing is sure in their battle with Montreal, Vancouver for second place. Boston Bruins clinched first place Sunday night.

Montreal would appear to have a slight edge in the schedule, drawing three expansion teams, Vancouver tonight, then California and Los Angeles, before finishing up against Toronto, Boston and the Rangers.

The Rangers face Boston Wednesday, then play back-to-back games against the Maple Leafs and another pair against Detroit Red Wings before the final game against Montreal.

But the edge may be negated by the fact that Montreal plays four of the six games on the road while the Rangers are at home for four, including the window against the Canadiens April 7.

Injuries also may affect the race for second. Montreal had its problems earlier in the season but now appears almost fully recovered.

But New York was playing without centre Walt Tkaczuk and defenceman Dale Murphy who coach Emile Francis announced Sunday that wingers Steve Vickers and Jerry Butler also would be out for the rest of the regular campaign. All four were expected to dress for the playoffs.

In addition to Montreal's visit of Vancouver Canucks tonight, Los Angeles Kings visit Minnesota North Stars.

Battle for Positions Far From Being Over

MONTREAL (CP) — Less than two weeks remain in the National Hockey League's 1975-76 regular schedule and today's several teams continue to jockey for playoff positions in the two divisions.

Boston Bruins have clinched the East Division title and the Prince of Wales Trophy along with the $4,000-per-man bonus that goes with it.

But second place in the East remains in doubt with only two points separating Montreal Canadiens and the third-place New York Rangers. This particular battle could continue through to the final game of the regular season for both teams when they meet head-on in New York April 7.

The Canadiens can finish no lower than third while the Rangers' number to guarantee at least third position and relegate Toronto Maple Leafs to fourth-place Chicago Black Hawks. But first-place Montreal has the best chance in a combination of six points—four points when combined with two points lost by the Hawks—to clinch the West title.

Five teams still have a chance to win the other two playoff positions in the West.

Third-place Los Angeles Kings, with 72 points, have a five-point edge over Atlanta Flames, and a 12-point lead over Minnesota North Stars. The Stars currently are in fifth position with 60 points, one more than St. Louis Blues and two more than Pittsburgh Penguins.

The Kings and the Flames have each played 72 games, as has St. Louis, while the North Stars and the Penguins have each played 71.

Meanwhile, it appears centre Phil Esposito of Boston has all but assured himself of his fourth straight scoring title and the fifth in six seasons.

Esposito has 138 points, 27 more than runner-up Bobby Orr of Boston and 36 more than third-place Ken Hodge, also of the Bruins.

Seven-point Lead For Mike Walton

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Mike Walton of Mid-Coast Fighting Sharks was held to two goals and an assist in three games last week, but still has the highest least chance in the World Hockey Association scoring race.

The 29-year-old centre has 53 goals and 59 assists for 112 points, to put him ahead of defending champion Andre Lacroix.

Lacroix has 31 goals and 74 assists for 105 points. He had 50 goals and 74 assists last season while playing for Philadelphia Blazers.

Lacroix needs two more assists to better J. C. Tremblay's record of 76 assists in 1974-75 season on behalf of Quebec Nordiques.

Billets Needed

Five or six more billets are still needed for this weekend's Annual Shrine Peewee tournament, according to Sean Reid, the billet chairman. Part of the reason has been the withdrawal of Trenton Peewees, who are still involved with OMHA playoff with Newmarket.

Taking their place will be Kingston Centre 76. Windsor is in the tournament now as a result of St. Thomas, also involved with OMHA playoffs, dropping out.

Anyone who could accommodate young hockey players this weekend are urged to call Mrs. Reid at 968-7448.

Loyalist Peewees Ready

Trap and Gun

Sunday was a high scoring day at the regular Quinte Trap and Gun club's regular shoot, with no less than 13 gunners recording at least 20.

Ontario Crown for Loyalist Rink

NORTH BAY (Special) — Overcoming an opening game loss to CEGEP of Rouyn, Quebec, Loyalist College of Belleville representing the eastern division, captured the men's event in the Ontario Colleges Athletic Association curling championships here on the weekend.

One up coming home, Loyalist saw its advantage disappear when CEGEP counted twice on the final end to take a 10-9 win. But from there on in, the Belleville College rink put together six straight wins in the round robin series to take the title without a playoff being necessary.

St. Clair College of Windsor was runnerup with a 5-2 record while CEGEP finished third with 4-3.

Mohawk of Hamilton, Humber of Rexdale and St. Lawrence, Kingston, were next in line with identical 3-4 marks while Oshawa's Durham College and Haileybury matched 2-5 records.

Commenting on the success of his rink, Rob Stinson, athletics supervisor at Loyalist, pointed out the championship was a first for the Bay of Quinte College.

"When one of our rink was having an off game, which happened more than once, the other guys more than made up for it with top efforts.

In the mixed event, Loyalist took fourth place behind first place Humber which had a 5-2 record; CEGEP, 4-3, and Sir Sandford Fleming of Peterborough, 4-3. The Loyalist rink posted a 3-4 record.

The women's event went to CEGEP which recorded a perfect 6-0 mark in the round robin competition. St. Clair was second.

Belleville Product On Championship Team

Probably the biggest upset story of the year in Canadian sports is the tale of the University of Guelph Gryphons drive to the University Athletic Association National Basketball championship.

Bill Henry, a native of Belleville, was a member of that Canadian Championship squad.

The Gryphons finished the regular season with a 7-5 record and received a bye for fourth place in the Ontario University Athletic Association's Western Division.

As a matter of fact, Guelph was only invited to the CIAU National Championship tournament because McMaster had declined their invitation.

Nevertheless, as a second choice squad the Gryphons defeated Acadia University, the second ranked team in Canada, for George William of Quebec and in the final game the defeated National Champion St Mary's Huskies from Halifax.

Garnet Henley, the star backfielder of the Hamilton Tiger-Cats, has coached the Gryphons for the seasons and considers Bill, "our find-of-the-ye... poise and ball-handling ab... combined with an accurate outside shot made him a solid addition to our club."

Henry is in his first year of post-secondary educ... and as a rookie in Guelph's lineup was unable to secure a first string position.

"It is a fact that as a rookie Bill was unable to crack the starting lineup," commented Coach Henley, "however, his contribution to the ultimate National Championship victory was most considerable."

The Belleville product finished eighth in the Gryphons' scoring statistics with a 2.5 average per game. The statistician that really counted, however, were his accuracy averages. Bill made 37.8 per cent of all field goals he attempted and 67.8 per cent of all free throws.

Said Henley, "Early in the year he proved capable of coming off the bench to run our offense, spelling starters. It is unusual for a rookie to step in and exhibit this type of poise and polish. He did so regularly and gained not only my confidence, but that of the entire team."

Known as "Billy the Kid' to his teammates the 6'1" rookie will be a top prospect for the guard positions open next season.

Added Henly, "I would not hesitate in predicting a promising future in intercollegiate basketball for this fine young gentleman."

Torre's Advice to Blass Is Stop Taking Advice

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Joe Torre has some advice for Steve Blass: Stop taking advice.

"Blass should stop being a nice guy," Torre said Monday after Blass handed St. Louis Cardinals five first-inning runs. The Cards then held on for a 5-4 exhibition baseball victory over Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I know how it is when you're having problems," Torre said. "I had nine last year and everybody was telling me to give me advice. I was too nice to tell them to let me alone."

Meanwhile, Hank Aaron, who needs only two regular-season home runs to surpass Babe Ruth's mark of 714, hit his second spring-training homer, "It was a two-run shot off Texas's Pete Broberg in the ninth inning, too late to prevent Atlanta Braves from losing to the Rangers 4-3.

Montreal Expos dropped their seventh in a row, bowing 5-4 to Houston. Jim Ray Lee, Los Angeles Dodgers shaded Minnesota Twins 5-4, Oakland A's downed beat Oakland Athletics 4-2, Baltimore Orioles edged Chicago White Sox 3-2, Houston Astros beat Cincinnati Reds 3-1, Kansas City Royals beat New York Yankees 4-1, San Diego Padres nipped Milwaukee Brewers 5-4, a Detroit Tigers squad trounced New York Mets 14-0 while a second Detroit team lost 11-3 to Philadelphia Phillies, and Cleveland Indians downed Cleveland Indians 8-6.

Montreal was holding its own against Boston until Juan Beniquez drove in a run with a pinch single in the eighth inning.

Mickey Stanley led a 17-hit Detroit attack on the Mets with four singles, a double and three runs batted in.

Mike Anderson and Greg Luzinski drove in three runs each as the Phillies beat the Tigers' B team.

The Dodgers ran their winning streak to nine games, edging the Twins on Willie Crawford's seventh double in the 10th inning.

Bobby Valentine singled twice, drove in a run and stole two bases to lead California over Oakland.

Fifth-inning home runs by Fernando Gonzalez and Fred Patek gave the Royals their win over the Yankees.

Fred Kendall tagged 28-game winner Jim Colborn for a three-run homer as San Diego edged Milwaukee.

Jerry Morales laced four hits and Billy Williams drove in three runs to lead the Cubs over Cleveland.

Belleville Wildkatz Trim Jet Set 5-2

The Jet Set Squad, champions of its group, was held to just one scoreless period in the third period.

Belleville starting goalie Bonnie Hannah blanked the home side for two periods and her replacement Jackie Hughes who took over in the third, came through with a top effort as well.

Belleville got a 2-0 lead into the third period. Lorraine Rossard scored for the visitors in the first frame and Nora Fleger counted the only goal of the second period.

Connie Ellis put Jet Set on the scoreboard early in the third on a powerplay but Wildkatz roared back to put three in a row and take command.

Wanda Clapp had two of the Belleville team's third period goals with the other going to Norma MacQuarrie. Connie Grills notched her second for the losers to close out the scoring in the game.

Cats Shooting For the Title

The Belleville Bobcats could wrap up the first league Championship for the club in many years at the Memorial Arena tonight. But it will be no easy task. Their work is very cleanly cut out for them, with the Brantford Blues pressing to regain the home ice advantage they lost Sunday night in Brantford.

The Blues are a coach himproved team since the end of the regular schedule, when they finished in fourth spot in the 114-team league, nine points behind third place Bobcats, with 51 points.

The Cats have been hard pressed to keep the form that carried them over the Pickering Panthers in the semi-final round in six games. Pickering was the league pennant winner.

One of the reasons Cats did take the game Sunday night in Brantford was the fine goaltending of Bob Moore. The red-headed goalie will start once again in net tonight, according to coach Moe Hunter, who "was very satisfied with his play in the last game."

Eric Powell will also once again be in the line-up for the game tonight. The call-up from the Lions' Midget minors performed well in Sunday's win, although not collecting any scoring points. A capacity crowd is expected for tonight's match at the Memorial Arena, with game time set for 8.30.

Golden Mile Upsets Meads

According to Golden Mile Restaurant Coach Don Putman his team is going all the way. And they started their way to the Gas House League A championship last night by upsetting previously undefeated Mead Johnson 3-0 in the first game of the final.

The Golden Mile is playing 100 per cent now, like they should have been playing all season.

In the other game played last night, The Intelligencer was given a short game in the best of five B semi-final by edging Rollins' Lumber 3-2 in two periods of overtime.

Mel Barriage Team Nips Picton Squad

There wasn't much to choose between Belleville Mel Barriage Landscaping team and the Picton squad in the opener of their Women's Hockey League playoff Sunday at Dick Ellis Rink. But as far as the Belleville girls were concerned, they were quite satisfied with the final outcome of the game.

Joyce McFarlane combined with Sue Morton and Judy Rappel to account for other goals for the winners. Margie Scanlon and Sue Fobert checked in with an assist each.

The series resumes in Picton, Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

Birt's Juveniles Tie Semi-final

TRENTON (Special — Birt's Handy Stand showed definite signs here Monday night that it is not about to give up its Ontario Minor Hockey Association Juvenile AA championship won last year, without a battle.

Birt's evened its OMHA best of five semi-final set with Thorhill in convincing style, as a packed house at the Community Gardens here cheered the approved 5-1 score in the crowd-pleaser was 6-2.

The series now stands at 1-1 with Game 3 scheduled for the Trenton arena Wednesday night. Birt's dropped the opener in Thornhill 4-2, March 17.

Trenton led 2-1 after a boisterous first period and upped the margin to 3-1 with the second period's only goal.

After Thornhill narrowed the gap at the 5:00 mark and an early counter in the final 20 minutes to make things interesting, Birt's responded by wrapping it up with three consecutive counters which closed out the game's scoring.

Coach Charlie Drake's Trenton squad was obviously "up" for this one. With team captain Don Armstrong opening at peak performance and his mates right in step, it was Birt's night.

Armstrong helped himself to three goals and an assist while linemate Scott McLean scored once and drew three helpers. Bill Clover and Scott Poole rounded out the Trenton scoring.

FBI Gives Kidnapping Details

In a complaint filed against Thomas Gary Hodgman on his arrest Monday, the FBI said the three men changed in the abduction of Eunice Kronholm drove to suburban Lino Lakes early March 15 after the drinking session in a Minneapolis bar.

Two of the kidnappers hid in a shed until Mrs. Kronholm emerged from her home that morning to keep a beauty-salon appointment, said the FBI affidavit.

Mrs. Kronholm, taken captive and held for $1 million, was released by one of her kidnappers after he heard on the radio that the FBI had arrested James Johnson, 35.

The FBI says it has recovered all but $85 of the ransom money.

Sets Record

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Denise Schaffer, 17, of Cloquet slept 111 hours and 16 minutes to win a marathon sleep weekend, winning a record for herself and about $1,600 for a classmate stricken with cancer.

Denise had a pledge from other students of $150 for every hour she stayed aloft in her 56,000-cubic-foot hot-air balloon.

Her mother says Denise bettered the 110-hour record for that class of balloon, nine hours 21 minutes, Mrs. Dinanon traveled 220 miles from Hudson, Wis., to Wayzata, Wis., was 33 miles farther than her father once did.

Best Friend?

Patrolman Fred Hansen said the unwanted couple told him they were "fooling around" with a pair of handcuffs Sunday and locked each other to a ceiling-high bookcase.

The husband said he accidentally dropped the key and his dog promptly swallowed it.

The couple managed to dial the telephone operator to request assistance. Hansen said he freed them with his own handcuff key.

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Wilfred Lawrence Carter, 66, of London died Monday when the car he was driving collided with a Canadian National Railways passenger train north of here. Police say the car was struck on a private laneway.

Vote to Strike

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — Employees of the Ford Dairy Home for the Aged have voted 100 per cent in favor of strike action to back demands for higher wages. The members of Local 293, Canadian Union of Public Employees, want wages comparable to their counterparts in southern Ontario, which they estimate to be 25 per cent higher than their own.

Committee Would Ban Snowmobiles on Roads

TORONTO (CP) — An Ontario legislature committee has proposed that snowmobiles and all-terrain vehicles such as mini-bikes be banned from public highways.

The 11-member select committee on snowmobiles and all-terrain vehicles says regulations are needed for those machines to protect the public, users of the machines, property, natural resources and the environment.

The committee, headed by Alex Carruthers (PC-Nipissing), tabled its final report in the legislature Monday.

The committee declared after months of hearings and several historic reports that there is a serious conflict between those "who use these machines and those who do not."

But it also says "this antagonism can be alleviated."

It suggested July 1 as the date the snowmobiles ban should be imposed, a year earlier than the compromise had originally planned. The report gives no deadline for a road ban on the other types of recreational vehicles.

Mr. Carruthers said recently the committee had decided on the earlier road ban for snowmobiles because of the mounting number of highway deaths involving the machines.

The committee urged the province to designate areas with proper facilities where snowmobiles can be operated.

Committee members generally in a demonstration of these hovercraft-type vehicles at Sarnia. In the report, the members said they found all-terrain vehicles to be generally banned off the road as they constitute a threat and a nuisance to the safety and privacy of the people of Ontario.

There should be a special permit issued to allow allterrain vehicles to operate only in designated areas.

Mr. Carruthers said in an interview the federal and provincial governments should co-ordinate their legislation to regulate vehicles that operate over land or water.

"The problem is that when these vehicles operate, for instance, on the Canadian Shield they come under federal law, but on the lake shore they come under provincial jurisdiction."

Private bills to control these vehicles were suggested by the Off-Road Vehicles Act and the Air Canada Pilots Act.

Mr. Carruthers said trail bikes, mini-bikes and dune buggies would also be part of off-road vehicles the committee would want controlled.

His report proposed specialcolored plates to identify off-road vehicles at an $8 fee. An additional $5 would be charged for vehicles that can be used both off and on the roads such as dune buggies. That quality for licensing under the Motor Vehicle Act.

It said a regular-driving license should be required to operate an off-road vehicle. Persons under 16 years, have a driving license but who is 16 or older should be permitted to operate off-road vehicles after a special competency test.

Private Corporations Are 'Guilty of Success'

TORONTO (CP) — Social problems such as pollution and job discrimination are blamed on the large corporation only because it "has done its job so well," Ontario Liberal leader Andrew Ouellet told a service club meeting Monday.

Mr. Ouellet said corporations provide Western society the most affluent, healthiest, most leisured and most educated but now are victims of their achievements.

He said corporations, which measure success in dollars, have failed to understand their social responsibilities that accord with their built-in selfinterest.

"What the corporation has been guilty of is success," he said. "It has simply been more efficient that any other institution."

Many people believe that corporation heads might solve social problems if they would forget about stock options, Mr. Ouellet said.

He said the nature of the corporation is to make profits, not to effect "long term, intangible social benefits." But, he added, that "creative entrepreneurship" might solve problems that would not only make money but "put give us medals for nationwide use."

Police Service Said Slow

OSHAWA, Ont. (CP) — The new region of Durham's police communication network has come under criticism for not dispatching police cars quickly enough in emergency situations.

Under the communications setup, a person calling from Uxbridge, a community 35 miles northwest of here, places an emergency call to the police station through the long-distance operator.

The operator then transfers the call toll-free to Oshawa, where a switchboard operator in police headquarters transfers the call back to the local police station in Uxbridge.

A complaint received recently by Pickering town council said that when a man fell through the ice on Frenchman's Bay, the call for help rang 16 times before it was answered.

Government Is Asked Not to Insure Animals

TORONTO (CP) — A spokesman for Ontario and Quebec farm mutual insurance companies on Monday asked federal government has been asked to drop its plan for a livestock insurance program in favor of permitting coverage by private companies.

K. W. Campbell, president of the Mutual Fire Underwriters Association, said his group and Federation des Assurances d'Incendie Inc. of Quebec, have been prepared to brief Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan.

Mr. Campbell, interviewed before the opening of his association's annual meeting, said the Ontario and Quebec associations were prepared to meet with the minister to discuss the insurance proposal.

Mr. Whelan announced the government's intention of developing a livestock insurance plan, similar to the federal-provincial crop insurance program, in Calgary last summer.

Mr. Campbell said farm mutuals already offer hail, wind and other damage policies on livestock and animal mortality should be a key coverage for private companies.

His association consists of 57 farm mutual insurance companies in Ontario and one company in Western Canada.

The Quebec City-based federation in that province has more than 300 member companies.

Goyer for Federal-provincial Company to Develop Oil Sands

CALGARY (CP) — Federal Supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer has proposed a federal-provincial Crown corporation to develop the Alberta oil sands but neither his colleagues nor the oil industry or the Alberta government seem to be supporting the idea.

In a 30-page proposal presented to the Calgary Chamber of Commerce Monday, the minister spelled out how Alberta's oil sands, the largest in the world, should in his opinion be developed between now and 1980.

Mr. Goyer first talked about the proposal in Calgary last Dec. 11 and has since spoken on the subject in Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal. Monday in Calgary, headquarters for most oil companies operating in Canada, he said, "I am making a detailed proposal."

However, he emphasized that he was speaking as "a concerned citizen, a federal minister" and "not on behalf of the cabinet." He said he has not discussed the proposal with the Alberta government except to ask them to feel it his responsibility to negotiate with the province.

Mr. Goyer said he has discussed the proposal briefly with some of his cabinet colleagues and "there has been no negative response."

In Ottawa, Prime Minister Trudeau told the Commons Mr. Goyer's proposal does not represent government policy. Energy Minister Donald Macdonald said he has serious doubts about it but "I admire his enthusiasm."

Mr. Trudeau said Mr. Goyer has permission to explore the idea but told reporters later that the supply minister is talking about "some hypothetical and very gigantic answers."

Mr. Goyer's proposal includes the takeover of giants now operating and to be operated by industry in the oil sands, and negotiations with the United States, the European economic community and Japan to borrow $20 billion for the project and repay the loan in oil, probably three billion barrels.

"The key words in my plan are: Rapid and massive development, 20 plants costing $20 billion, funds borrowed from foreign countries and repaid in oil, a holding corporation owned by Canadians, and construction and operation by companies from the petroleum industry according to Canada's national objectives."

The Alberta Energy Co. and the proposed Canadian Petrofina Corp. he suggested, could form the basis of the oil sands Crown corporation.

He said "there is no question" about Alberta's ownership of its energy resources but this project is too gigantic for Alberta to do it alone.

Oil companies, whose objectives Mr. Goyer said do not always coincide with Canadian objectives, "can be the subcontractors of the Crown corporation."

Oil industry spokesmen called the proposal "judicious" and "acceptable."

"The people of Canada have reason to be scared if this is government thinking," said John Poyen, president of the Canadian Petroleum Association. "It is completely disoriented in view of the practicalities of life."

Bill Dickie, Alberta minister of mines and minerals, said he would like to see Mr. Goyer's bill proposal. However, he said he was not excited by what Mr. Goyer has said on the subject—"full of inaccuracies"—in the last few months.

Attendance At Schools Found High

TORONTO (CP) — Pupil attendance appeared to exceed expectations at some York region secondary schools Monday as classes resumed following a two-week strike that began Feb. 1.

A survey of four schools in the region showed only one—Bayview secondary school—with a significant number of students who might have dropped out during the strike by 207 teachers.

Bayview principal Arthur Martin said he expected a number of dropouts to be between 50 and 75.

"But three weeks ago I said it could be as many as 150, so I'm pleasantly surprised," he added.

Although only 1,225 of about 1,600 Bayview students turned out for classes, 16 others were en route home from a tour of Soviet Union. Normal absenteeism at the school is between 40 and 80.

George Domina, principal of Richmond Hill high school, reported a first-day attendance of 950 out of an enrolment of 823.

"And we also had a Bar Mitsia who are due back tomorrow," he said.

At the other two schools—Thornhill and Thornlea—the number of dropouts was satisfactory to be less than 40.

Thornhill principal Donald Sherman said between 22 and 25 per cent of the 1,323 students of the turned up Monday or were known to be returning from abroad. Most of the remaining absenteeism could be explained by illness or other such reasons, he said.

The 207 of the region's 850 teachers who had submitted resignations in the York County board of education agreed March 14 to return to work Monday "under duress" while a three-member arbitration board works out a new contract.

The teachers went on strike to back demands for salary increases, a cost-of-living allowance and the right to negotiate teacher-pupil ratios.

Arbitrator

TORONTO (CP) — Liberal Senator H. Carl Goldenberg of Montreal, an expert on industrial relations and public finance, Monday night was accepted as chairman of an arbitration board in a contract dispute between the Windsor, Ont., separate school board and its teachers.

Acceptance of Mr. Goldenberg to head the three-member board was announced in a joint statement by the school board and the Ontario English Catholic Teachers Association.

Plan to Cut Down Trees To Get Rid of Birds

GRACEHAM, Md. (AP) — Officials said Monday they plan to remove dead trees in the battle against the birds of Gracehaven.

Dr. Kenneth Crawford, chief veterinarian for the state health department, said authorities will call on forestry experts to help remove down trees and thinning branches in the 60-acre pine grove where millions of starlings have roosted and starlings have been roosting.

Crawford estimated that three nights of bursting firecrackers, high-pitched recorded sounds and exploding natural gas bombs had chased about 90 per cent of the birds away.

The sound-and-light spectacular which began Friday night will continue this week, he said.

"We've won the battle but not the war," Crawford said. "We won't win the war until we eliminate the attractive dense forest that's there."

A spokesman for the health department said the species of birds that have plagued Gracehaven since last November did not roost in thinned or felled trees.

Some residents of Gracehaven have complained that the methods used so far against the birds have been inhumane. They claim large numbers of birds still roost in the grove.

Uranium Miners Get Lung Illness

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — Lorne D. Williams, an executive of the United Steelworkers of America, today accused federal Labor Minister John Munro of dragging his feet on proposed outbreak of lung disease among uranium miners.

"The minister has passed the buck to the Ontario government," Mr. Williams, director of the union's 125,000-member district 6, told a mining safety conference at the Sudbury Steelworkers' office.

"Curiously, the minister has proclaimed no regulations under the federal labor safety code to protect uranium miners from uranium cancers and silicosis."

Mr. William said the union's locals in Elliot Lake, Ont., have found more than 130 cases of lung silicosis in two mines employing about 1,500 persons in that community.

The province's health ministry recently ordered checkups to detect lung impairment, but provincial levels for radiation exposure in uranium mining are "much too high," he added.

"The Tory Ontario government is as dominated by big business as the Liberals," he said. "Both parties are beholden to mining companies to keep safety laws weak."

Not Guilty

TORONTO (CP) — Walter Doctor of Toronto, an industrial consultant, was found not guilty by a jury Monday night on a charge of unlawfully accepting a benefit in return for the purported exercise by him to influence with a federal government official.

The charge also alleged Mr. Doctor was unlawfully involved in the guarantee of a loan to Modern Garment Co. Ltd. of Toronto under the federal general adjustment assistance program.

Thor Otvos, an official of Monica Garment, testified it did not seem a criminal act to him to give money to government officials.

Germans Find Hamsters Can Spread Diseases

BONN (Reuter) — Beware of the humble hamster.

The harmless-looking household pet may spread illness among its owners, including a disease that can deform unborn children, the federal German health ministry has indicated.

Hamster sales in West Germany have slumped since the ministry published its warning this month. The pets usually sell for about $5.

The ministry warning follows three years of research by Cologne University neurologist Rudolf Ackermann, who found that in two separate cases unborn children were deformed after the mothers caught an illness carried by hamsters.

Although experts don't expect final results for about five years, the ministry has circulated an information sheet to all West Germany's official health centres.

It says hamsters have been infected by ordinary house mice with a virus that, if passed on to people, can cause inflammation of the brain — encephalitis—or a disease known as lymphocytaria choriomeningitis (LCM), which might bring widespread deformity of unborn children if contracted by the pregnant mother.

Research programs in Cologne and Frankfurt are investigating how widespread the virus is, how it can be isolated, and whether a drug can be developed to counter it.

Blow Not Good Ganglion Cure

By G. C. THOMPSON, MD

Dear Dr. Thompson: I was told by my doctor that the lump at the base of my finger was a ganglion. One day I accidentally hit it and it disappeared. What exactly is a ganglion? What can be done to cure them? Is it possible that mine will return?—S.H.

Quite possible that it might return—about half of them do under such circumstances.

A ganglion is either a cyst or a fibroma (a fibrous tumor) in the sheath that covers a tendon, and it forms because of a weakness at that spot in the fibrous tissues.

Particularly I get questions about a ganglion, and my usual advice is to ignore it since it is a benign lump.

Banging a ganglion with a book is the classic old-fashioned way of handling them—a crude method in my opinion and only temporary but the time.

If a ganglion is unsightly or causing discomfort, it can be corrected surgically without the risk of having it come back.

Dear Dr. Thompson: Can you tell me something about diverticulitis? Following an acute attack it is necessary to remain on a low-residue diet the rest of one's life? What is allowed and what is banned?—H.L.C.

No, a low residue diet is not always necessary. You must, however, avoid foods (most fruits and berries) that have hard seeds as they can irritate the sac. They have irritating husks or hulls.

Diverticulitis is an inflamed phase of the very common diverticulosis.

Dear Dr. Thompson: Is there any way to increase the length of your toes and fingers, say a centimeter?—Reader

Not unless you are young enough to be still growing. And in that case nature decides it.

Dear Dr. Thompson: Is it normal for a person to snore? I know it is much improved in recent years, I am 71 and nervous about the operation because I have a heart condition. Would like many to hear from anyone who have been told it would not be a serious strain on the heart. Is that correct?—E.W.

No, not serious in the sense of life threatening. But it is an important operation in the sense of restoring vision. The amount of time that is disturbed is extremely small (the lens of the eye) and this means only a very few hardes on your physical system as compared, say, with an operation like removing your appendix or gall bladder. And even those are operations well tolerated by the patient.

Probably the greatest strain on your heart would set entailed in worrying about the operation—so don't worry. And you will come through excellently. Close to half a million cataract operations are being performed every year in the United States, which should help you realize that it is not a dangerous operation.

Note to H.F.: I'd take with a grain of salt the claim that vitamins are going to "relieve pain." Then you will be more comfortable following your doctor's advice on what will help you.

Win at Bridge

Culbertson shows his best stuff

Ely won in dummy while discarding a heart, ruffed a third club; ruffed a heart; cashed dummy's ace and king of spades; ruffed a spade; ruffed a heart; led a heart with the nine of trumps; ruffed another club; ruffed his last heart with dummy's ace of trumps while Dorothy had to underruff and made the last two tricks with his king and jack of trumps.

Incidentally, we have no criticism of Ely's one heart bid. System or no system you can't sit back with a two suit hand and stay out of the bidding when your partner opens.

We do have some criticism of the defense. A diamond opening or a diamond lead at trick three would have left Ely one trick short.

Today's hand shows Ely Culbertson at his best. To start with, he threw his Culbertson system right out the window and responded to his partner's one club opening. Then when he had a chance to stop at four diamonds he went on to five only to find that Jo, who thought Ely had a better hand, proceeded to take him to six.

Had Sims decided to open a club, Ely won in dummy and promptly led a heart. Dorothy rose with her ace and led a second club.

IN MEMORIAM

ROBINSON — In sad and loving memory of a dear mother and grandmother who passed away March 26th, 1973.
Lovingly and kind in all her ways,
Upright and just to the end of her days,

A beautiful memories she has left behind.
Sadly missed and always remembered by Jessie and Jennifer-in-law Walter Mayhew.

MUIR — In loving memory of my mother Audrey Muir who passed away on March 26th, 1973.
A little flower small and fair,
Planted in my heart by God.
— Jim, Rebecca and Daniel.

Many years have passed by,
Our a loved one gone to rest,
But memories of him we hold today,
And those memories are best.
The flowers we lay upon his grave,
May wither and decay,
But the love for him who lies beneath,
Will never fade away.
— Always remembered by sister Janet and brother-in-law.

MARAUS — In loving memory of a daughter Deborah Ann Maraus, died March 26, 1968.
Six years ago a little heart,
Has had to stand and bear,
And innocence kept empty on,
That love could be shared,
Then God took me into His arms,
And He was pure for this and more,
The beautiful is God's and more,
And so God's holy mind here,
Is why I cannot touch,
Still I feel your presence at last,
Your dad Father Ruth and Audrey Maraus.

SPURGEON, Rod — In loving memory of a dear son, "Rod" Spurgeon, who left us suddenly March 26th, 1973.
Though the years have passed,
Though I've had I cannot touch,
Still I feel your presence at last,
Of the one I loved so much.
His memory is my keepsake,
With which I will remain,
And my son you will always,
Be in my heart.
— Love, mother, father and sister, missed by your mother.

MOFARLAND — In loving memory of a dear husband and father who passed away March 26th, 1973.
No morning dawns, no night returns,
But that I think of you,
And though you're not very good,
You're always in my mind,
Memory is about all I have,
Of what I used to find,
Memories are very precious,
But the one I call my own,
Always remembered by husband Thomas.

Premiers Meet PM To Decide Oil Price

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau and provincial premiers, minus Newfoundland's Frank Moores who is ill with the flu, meet today in a final effort to set future domestic oil prices before a voluntary national price freeze ends Sunday.

Alex Hickman, Newfoundland justice minister, will represent Mr. Moores at the talks.

Mr. Trudeau finished Tuesday advance negotiations with premiers Peter Lougheed of Alberta and Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan.

"We're a long way from an agreement," Premier Blakeney told reporters following a 90-minute meeting. But this is not to suggest that an agreement won't be arrived at."

Mr. Trudeau, who talked Monday with Premier Lougheed, made no comment following his meeting with Mr. Blakeney.

The conference, second in two months, will be held in private at the prime minister's Sussex Drive residence.

Mr. Trudeau indicated Monday that a bill forcing a settlement will be introduced in Parliament if the meeting ends in a deadlock. Federal officials say they have power to set oil prices by law.

The first conference, in late January, produced no long-term settlement and both western premiers say none will be ironed out today. But another interim agreement is possible, Mr. Blakeney said.

If so, it likely would last longer than the 90-day agreement negotiated January, but shorter than 18 months, he said.

He did not elaborate.

"The freeze, in effect since September, has held the price of crude oil produced and used in Canada to about $4 a barrel. International prices have jumped to more than $10.30 a barrel and both Alberta and Saskatchewan want major price boosts.

Ottawa, anxious to hold down oil prices in consuming provinces, has suggested an initial $2 increase to $6 a barrel, plus negotiations on questions on western economic issues such as transportation, agricultural stabilization and industrial development.

A $6-a-barrel wellhead price would mean an increase of five or six cents a gallon at-retail for gasoline and heating oil. Western Canadian crude is used in nearly all petroleum markets west of the Ottawa Valley.

Energy Minister Donald Macdonald hinted last week at a wellhead price of $6 to $7 a barrel while a permanent solution is negotiated. Mr. Blakeney said Tuesday this would be "on the low side" but did not rule it out.

If no solution is reached, Ottawa probably has the constitutional right to bring in legislation. Mr. Blakeney said that the producing provinces could not be forced to sell if they found the price unacceptable.

Mr. Blakeney and Mr. Lougheed remained in the city after their advance talks, and premiers Dave Barrett of British Columbia and Ed Schreyer of Manitoba were to arrive late Tuesday night.

A special transport department plane was to pick up Mr. Moores in Newfoundland. Alex Campbell of Prince Edward Island and Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia early today. Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick and Robert Bourassa of Quebec and William Davis of Ontario were making their own travel arrangements.

James Bay Riot Probe Is Ordered

QUEBEC (CP) — An estimated $1-million damage done last week at a James Bay hydro development project site has prompted Quebec Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer to announce an inquiry into construction camp violence throughout the province.

Mr. Cournoyer, speaking in the national assembly Tuesday, said the inquiry commissioner would study the worker rampage at LG-2, largest camp in the James Bay project 650 miles northwest of Montreal, and relations between management and employees on other work sites.

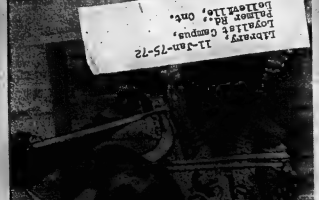
"We have to find out what causes this kind of violence and make sure it does not occur so easily again," he told reporters outside the legislature.

In Montreal, a James Bay Energy Corp., (SEBEC) spokesman hinted that further work on the $6-billion project may not be undertaken until tough measures are enacted to guarantee labor peace.

Fernand Keroack, who visited LG-2 after the camp was shut down, said replacing equipment damaged during the violence could cost about $2 million.

He denied allegations by a union official that corporation provocation had sparked the incidents.

Mr. Cournoyer told the legislature that some events at the main James Bay project camp appeared to be criminal in nature and that the justice department is conducting its own investigation.



"We must understand that these workers live in isolation, and this is always the complaint when you visit a site," he said.

"They don't see their wives, they don't live like human beings. They make money but they have no way to spend it. This builds up when there are other problems on the job during the day."

He said the inquiry would attempt to determine the effects of isolation on workers and would study the question of recreational facilities for workers.

"But the unions must do a bit of housecleaning themselves if they don't want the government to interfere every time there is trouble," he said.

News Briefs

Sentence Appealed

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. (CP) — The Ontario attorney-general's department has appealed a seven-day jail sentence given to a 15-year-old Peterborough youth convicted of attempted murder of a policeman. The department will seek a heavier sentence for Gary Chamberlain of Norwood for shooting at Constable David Dewson who was investigating a break-in at a Peterborough department store last July 13.

House Searched

OTTAWA (CP) — There were sinister goings-on up on Parliament Hill Tuesday night, but no one was willing to divulge exactly what happened. RCMP on the Hill denied there had been a bomb scare. But some of their officers searched the main Parliament building and police officers are not allowed into the building unless they have permission from the Speaker of the Commons. Officials in the Speaker's office were not available for comment.

Man Dies in Fire

TORONTO (CP) — One man died and at least four others were injured, one of them a fireman, in a fire Tuesday night in a three-storey rooming house in mid-Toronto. The death of Robert Newton, about 45, brings to at least eight the number of persons killed in rooming-house fires in the city this year.

Littering Charged

HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP) — Robert Edward Spears, acquitted Monday of murder in the death of a man, Rocco Wayne Thompson, whose body was tossed into the Ohio River, has been charged with stream littering. Thompson's body floated here and was retrieved from the river last July 29. Spears testified he shot Thompson in self-defence and then threw his body in the river. The littering charge carries a fine of $20 to $500 or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than six months.

Labor Gets Support

LONDON (CP) — The minority Labor government's lawraising budget today may win grudging support from the NDP and strengthen the party's tenuous grip on power.

The economically orthodox Financial Times comments:

"We cannot quarrel with Mr. (Denis) Healey's budget judgment: A broadly neutral budget with a tendency to err on the side of deflation rather than the reverse is what we ourselves recommended as appropriate to an economic situation which is more than usually obscure."

Treasury chief Healey slapped on a wide range of tax increases, including earnings, candy, whiskey, gambling and gasoline but at the same time eased the burden on the lower paid, stepped up pensions to the elderly and gave a hefty boost to the government's food subsidy program.

Ontario Action On Food Is Sought

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario needs more than "bland assurances that nothing can be done" provincially about the rising cost of food, Opposition Leader Robert Nixon said Tuesday.

Mr. Nixon made his statement in the legislature as he and Stephen Lewis, leader of the New Democratic Party, continued their attacks on rising living costs.

Ben Wicks

The NDP leader said there is "clear evidence" of marking up items ahead of an supermarket shelves in Toronto stores.

That occurred last weekend, Mr. Lewis said, despite statements from Premier William Davis last August that the practice was "irresponsible."

Premier Davis countered by stating that "we really want to solve the problem then your responsible leaders (David Lewis and Pierre Trudeau) should get out of bed together and do something about it."

Court Records Said Removed

TORONTO (CP) — An assistant Crown attorney and three Ontario Provincial policemen have been arrested by Metropolitan Toronto police in connection with the disappearance of court records.

Police said the investigation began when a man appeared in court last month on a traffic charge. They questioned why he had a driver's licence since his permit had been ordered suspended in a trial about a year ago.

Police said the court record never reached the department of transportation and communications and no suspension was recorded.

Nuclear Arms Talks Stall

MOSCOW (AP) — A stalemate in nuclear weapons negotiations may keep Henry Kissinger in Moscow until the end of the week.

Informed sources said United States state secretary and Soviet Communist party leader Leonid Brezhnev have been unable so far to achieve the "conceptual breakthrough" that might lead to the new arms-limitation treaty President Nixon hopes to sign when he visits the Soviet capital in the summer.

Brezhnev is understood to have cautioned Kissinger during their first meeting Monday against stressing the large U.S. advantage in missiles carrying multiple warheads. He is reported to have likened such talk to blackmail.

This might explain Kissinger's warning at a luncheon Monday that "if we attempt to blackmail each other," there can be no peace in the world.

Kissinger during his stay in Moscow hopes to work out a deal for a treaty limiting the development of missiles carrying multiple warheads, the MIRVs in which the United States has a big advantage, while balancing off the Soviets' edge in payload capacity.

Nuclear Arms Stored Here

OTTAWA (CP) — Somewhere, perhaps in Canada and perhaps elsewhere, there are nuclear weapons stockpiled in the name of Canada.

Defence officials conceded as much Tuesday night under questioning in the Commons defence committee. But they wouldn't say where the weapons are, except that they are under control of the United States Air Force.

A defence department spokesman, asked after the meeting where the weapons are stockpiled, said only that he is not permitted to say.

But he said the CF-101 squadrons in Comox, Bagotville, Que., and Chatham, N.B., are capable of using nuclear weapons.

UAW May Rejoin CIO

WASHINGTON (AP) — United Auto Workers' President Leonard Woodcock confirmed Tuesday that his union is considering rejoining the AFL-CIO but insisted whether a decision would come at the union's June convention.

Davis Calls Federal Curbs on Ownership of Uranium Mines Too Restrictive

TORONTO (CP) — Premier William Davis told the legislature Tuesday that the federal government's equity requirements for ownership of uranium mines were too restrictive and inhibited exploration.

His government, he said, wanted greater control over Ontario's uranium resources.

The premier unveiled his government's policy on uranium and associated nuclear fuels on the eve of a federal-provincial conference on gas and oil prices in Ottawa.

He said Ontario has 80 per cent of the proven Canadian reserves of uranium, which amounts to almost 20 per cent of the Western world's supply.

The importance of uranium, he said, will increase as oil and gas supplies diminish.

"This places upon us a particular responsibility if the national context. . . . In effect we hold these resources in trust for Canada."

However, Mr. Davis's indication that his government apparently wanted federal restraints on uranium provoked comment from opposition benches.

The federal government requires 90 per cent Canadian ownership of uranium mines.

Mr. Davis said he could see no reason why there should be equity requirements for uranium, while none exist for oil, gas and coal.

Opposition Leader Robert Nixon asked the premier whether he was suggesting that Canada allow uranium to escape Canadian control like gas and oil.

The premier said it was debatable whether it was unfortunate that gas and oil were foreign-controlled.

NDP Veto in Offing

Lewis Appeals to Lewis

TORONTO (CP) — An Ontario government bid for federal easing of domestic ownership requirements for uranium mines provoked Stephen Lewis, provincial New Democratic Party leader, to such an extent that he phoned his father.

His father—federal NDP leader David Lewis has agreed to put before his caucus the proposition that one condition of continued support for the federal government is a rejection of the Ontario demand.

What apparently rankles both father and son is a portion of the Ontario government's policy paper which suggests restraint on foreign investments in uranium should be lifted.

Although his father had agreed to put the matter before the federal caucus, Mr. Lewis said he did not believe the federal government would even consider the Ontario proposals.

He said his government supports greater domestic control over foreign ownership of industrial base "to the extent that it is practical."

"It is fair to point out that as it relates to uranium it has been inhibiting and restrictive," said the premier.

"What we are seeking is some balance whereby further funding, further exploration capital can be found."

Outside the legislature, Energy Minister Darcy McKeough said the federal government placed a restriction of 90 per cent Canadian ownership on uranium mines in 1970 when it blocked a sale of Denison Mines Ltd. to American investors.

The 90 per cent was "unrealistic" but "we would say control by Canadians is realistic."

New Democrat Leader Stephen Lewis said it was intolerable to suggest greater exploration for uranium at the expense of Canadian ownership.

Coupled with the premier's statement in the legislature, Mr. McKeough released a 40-page report on uranium which recommends:

—Provincial control over the exploration, production, and processing of uranium resources.

—The formation of a joint federal-provincial body to ensure that Canada's uranium resources are developed to meet national and Ontario's needs.

—A formula be developed to establish long-term Canadian uranium requirements.

—The transfer, where possible, of nuclear fuel technology to the private sector.

"The clear objective of the government is to assure that the very large investment made in nuclear generation facilities by Ontario will be protected and that the plans and intentions of other provinces will not be frustrated through shortages of uranium resulting from inappropriate national policy," said Mr. Davis in summing up his government's position.

Volunteers Will Have Own Week

Most volunteers who give of their time without payment are seldom recognized for the tremendous service they provide a city such as Belleville.

But this year, that service will be acknowledged in a manner different from that in previous years, says Selma Bochnek, co-ordinator of Volunteer Recognition Week April 29 to May 5.

Following the lead of the United States where volunteer week is proclaimed nationally in May, Mrs. Bochnek and Central Volunteer Bureau (CVB) executive director Ruth Burrows have been working since Jan. 31 to provide a vehicle to inform Belleville what its volunteers do.

The result is a week-long program culminating in an open house-information mart at the Four Seasons Hotel conference rooms May 5th 2-4 p.m.

Primarily, said Mrs. Bochnek, sanctioned co-ordinator by the CVB board of directors, the open house will be to inform the public.

"So many people have the time and inclination to work," she said this week. "But they don't have the self-confidence. They don't know how little experience is needed in some areas of volunteer work."

Through displays by representatives of some 30 city organizations using volunteers, Mrs. Bochnek hopes to show how the public can get involved.

It'll demonstrate what is being done by people in the community for the community, she says. A side result will be that groups in Belleville — some 47 in total — will become familiar with the work each other performs through the use of unpaid volunteers.

The information mart concept is different from the form of recognition given volunteers two years ago, in 1972 individual groups were requested to choose one of their number as the organization's Volunteer of the Year.

However, said Mrs. Bochnek, "In the feedback I got it seemed most people felt it was difficult to pick one person when so many volunteers were working. The standards for selection were also difficult to decide."

Someone could work by five to 20 years and not be recognized. On the other hand, someone could work two or three years, get outstanding visible, and be publicly acknowledged, she said.

"We don't want to just recognize the queen bees," said Ruth Burrows, CVB director of workers.

In 1972, a one-day recognition program was held.

This year's week-long public "thank you" is itself co-ordinated by a volunteer program. The Central Volunteer Bureau acts as a resource centre that dispatches volunteers to organizations that are in need of help for a specific reason. A central list contains names of people skilled in various fields.

Food Prices Dip Slightly

By BARBARA BOBSON
The Canadian Press

Food prices dipped slightly in March in several Canadian cities while the federal government slapped price limits on increases to consumers.

A Cross-Canada survey by The Canadian Press of 13 cities showed declines in the total price of 31 standard items in seven urban centres.

Top cuts of beef and pork fell in price in some cities but rose in others. The price of chicken generally was down and tomatoes dipped sharply in price in several cities.

A reduction of about $4.50 a 100 pounds in the wholesale price of sugar resulted in slight decreases in retail prices.

Among government measures, a seven-cents-a-pound subsidy to beef producers was introduced in mid-month, but Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan warned that a dairy producer's subsidy cannot go higher.

Agriculture officials indicated in March that dairy farmers' would soon be granted a $2-increase on the price of 100 pounds of manufacturing milk, but refused to disclose what additional subsidies, if any, would be applied to offset retail price increases.

Bread prices remained steady in most cities after the Bakery Council of Canada agreed to limit price increases to those authorized by the food prices review board.

Parking Garage Planned

Construction of a multi-storey downtown parking garage with accommodation for up to 400 cars is among the long-range plans of the Belleville Parking Authority.

Announcement of the parking garage plan was made Tuesday night at a joint meeting of the parking authority and executives of the Downtown Merchants' Association and the Board of Management of Downtown Development.

At the meeting it was announced by Gerry O'Connor, chairman of the PUC that the Front Street commission property had been sold to the parking authority.

If construction of the new PUC office building at the corner of Sidney and College Streets is completed, there will also be a ramp to gain access to the Pinnacle Street lot.

Parking authority chairman Cleo Colling said the parking authority had retained consultants Totten, Sims and Hubicki Associates Ltd. to do a conceptual study of the PUC building, the Pinnacle Street parking lot and the Campbell Street lot.

Cost of the proposed garage could amount to as much as $800,000 and Mr. Colling warned that the authority could conceivably need financial help from the downtown merchants to carry out the project.

The authority has asked city council to approve a capital works budget of $100,000 for the next five years, but even if this was approved, the chairman expected other help would be needed.

He said the PUC property was a natural but development would be expensive anywhere from one half million to $1 million — but said it must be realized that parking was necessary for the city's downtown to survive.

"We hope the merchants will support us," he said.

Alderman Jack Ireland, representing Mayor Robin Jeffery, who had another engagement, congratulated the parking authority on its aggressiveness and in making plans for a parking garage.

With rapidly increasing land costs he said that parking accommodation should be provided by going up, not out.

Bruce Lynch, chairman of the downtown merchants, and Alderman Roger Porter, chairman of the Board of Downtown Development, also congratulated the parking authority and offered co-operation.

Alderman Porter said he was anxious to see further development of off-street parking.

Earlier in the meeting the alderman asked if the authority was giving any consideration to the eventual removal of parking from Front Street.

Mr. Colling said, however, that revenue from Front Street parking was needed for the authority to exist.

And Front Street merchant Irving Shulman said street parking was essential for downtown merchants to exist. He said there was a psychological effect for motorists being able to see stores and to park in the curbside.

Long time parking authority secretary, City Clerk Adam Stalker was credited by Mr. Colling for the idea of purchasing the PUC property as a Front Street entrance for a possible parking garage.

Later Mr. Stalker told the meeting he hoped his lengthtime dream of a parking garage was at last about to be realized.

Parking Going Up

Meter parking rates on Front Street and on the main arteries leading into it will be increased with the arrival ago installation of new meters now on order by the Belleville Parking Authority.

Cleo Colling, chairman of the city parking authority, told a joint meeting of his organization with executives of the Downtown Merchants and the Board of Management for Downtown Development, that the parking rate with the new meters would be 10 cents a half hour and 20 cents an hour.

The new meters will take all sizes of silver coins excepting half dollars.

Mr. Colling cited increased authority operational costs as the reason for the increase in meter rates.

But the announcement of the increased meter rate didn't sit too well with Irving Shulman, Front Street merchant and former member of the parking authority.

Mr. Shulman called the rate increase a "rash move" on the part of the authority and claimed the idea rather should be to encourage people to come downtown.

He said the authority should have first discussed the rate change with downtown merchants.

In any event, the new meters should provide a 15-minute parking rate for a nickel to accommodate motorists stopping only long enough to go to the bank.

Mr. Shulman said he didn't like to "rap the knuckles" of the parking authority, but felt increased meter rates would serve to chase people away from downtown.

Also at the meeting the authority chairman said cost estimates were being obtained for installation of additional lighting on the commercial lot along the river. He said the additional lighting was very much needed, for downtown parking at night, especially during the winter months.

TRENTON — Municipal staff here have received 10 percent raises across the board with council's approval of CUPE negotiations.

The contract talks, affecting about 10 clerical and town office staff and another 20 outside workers, stretches over two years according two 10 per-cent raises.

With the pay raises is a cost-of-living adjustment Cost-of-living increases experienced this year will be reflected in raises next year according to town officer sources.

This is the first contract renewal since late 1971 when similar 10 percent raises were granled, says Arden Royce, deputy clerk.

Vigil in the Dark

The annual battle of wits between poachers and wildlife wardens is beginning as fish return to Bay of Quinte spawning grounds.

Steve Myers (left) contacts other patrols on walkie-talkie as he and fellow conservation officer Bob Crook keep chilled, but vigilant, watch on Prince Edward creek Tuesday night.

'Turmoil' In Farming

BLOOMFIELD — "Never has there been such turmoil in agriculture," says Harry Evans, chairman of the Prince Edward County Milk Producers.

At a recent meeting in Bloomfield Mr. Evans asked, "When do you mind, such a period when costs have risen so much in almost everything connected with the production of milk, veal and beef, all connected with our industry.

He said that there is a new attitude in consumers. Their demand for "a fair shake" is growing more insistent.

Mr. Evans predicted the possibility of formula pricing techniques explaining that this step involves prices commensurate with the cost of production.

He also forecast more subsidies or support prices paid out to farmers as they decline in number and share a greater burden in food production.

Mr. Evans, a Cherry Valley farmer, was re-elected chairman of the milk producers' committee during the meeting. Vice-chairman is Gary Fox. The secretary-treasurer is Ken Wright.

Not Resigning Says Reeve Of Picton

PICTON — Picton reeve Ross Cronkwright has contradicted rumors that he may resign from town council.

Reeve Cronkwright referred to a newspaper item that indicated he plans to resign. He said that he had submitted his resignation from council because of ill-health but "now withdrew it as he felt improved.

He commented that he has resigned from the chairmanship of a committee in county council and another in town council. He will continue to serve on both, however.

Mr. Cronkwright became reeve of Picton this winter when former reeve, James Bird was elected by council to succeed the late mayor H. J. McFarland. Before stepping up to the reeveship he had served as deputy-reeve for approximately one year.

Spawning: The Alert Begins

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

CONSECON — Only a night wind stirs. But there's blackness around the cold-running creek.

It's neither the time or place to fancy fishing. But the bleak, obscured setting may make ideal conditions fishing for bear-armed poachers.

Which is what brings the two uniformed men to the spot. They're there to exercise vigilant authority in the cause of conservation.

The annual run of fish back to their spawning grounds around the Bay of Quinte is about to begin. And with it the conservation patrols are being mustered along the waterways.

At present, a cold snap has delayed what earlier, temperate weather hinted might be an early start to the 1974 spawning season. Now, it appears the run will stick to normal schedule, pike appearing as usual toward the end of March, followed by pickerel.

As yet, the pike run may only be a trickle and few have been reported up to now. Nonetheless, officials at the Ministry of Natural Resources' Napanee offices — which polices Bay wildlife habitats — are taking no chances.

There's good cause for such vigilance. Late last week, only days after the first pike had been reported in the area,

Boats on Show

PICTON — Hullmaster Boats Limited, of Loch Sloy Industrial Park, will hold an open house and boat show on March 30 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Featured in the boats on display will be the Hullmaster 21, acclaimed Best Boat of the Show during the Montreal boat show.

As a result of the encounter, two men have been charged, a spear and pike seized.

The number of round-the-night patrols who roam the hills against poachers will be stepped up, in the immediate future as the spawning run increases, says Jack Stewart, district wildlife management officer.

At present, the main sector of policing is Prince Edward County. But, the ministry's Napanee district reaches from Brighton through to Kingston, a drawout waterfrontage trimmed by the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario. As the fish multiply, so does pressure on the seven-man force available for patrolling the waterways.

So, ministry officers are being drafted from other districts to reinforce area staff.Men from as far away as Sudbury are being called in to more than double the conservation concentration in the district.

It will mean more trained men than ever to police the Quinte spawning run.

The men from the ministry don't work alone. The patrols are equipped with walkie-talkies. Help is only a radio call away. Liaison with provincial and local police forces is close and practised. They've been making common cause against poaching for years.

The law being enforced is the Game and Fish Act, which carries a maximum $1,000 fine. But it also permits on-the-spot forfeitures. Equipment, even trucks and automobiles, may be seized immediately of officers have a case.

Prime patrol areas is considered to be weeks include the mouth of the Trent River, The Moira River beds at Belleville have been dead water for spawning fish for more than a decade.

It's Syrup Time Again

Visitors can enjoy pancakes and syrup with coffee or milk.

Organizers of the event are urging all participants to bundle up and to wear waterproof footgear for the trip to the sugar bush.

Ameliasburgh Machinery Museum

Township Rescues Farming Heritage

AMELIASBURGH — Large, heavy farm machinery has been disappearing as it has decayed.

Now numerous prized pieces will be preserved for viewing by generations to come due to foresight of this township's active museum board.

The board's enmity has started a covered building, 2,400 square feet in area, to display a collection that began accumulating soon after the historical centre was officially opened in Ameliasburgh in 1968.

For the last 150 years large, heavy farm machines after accumulating, invariably wound up in some township dump. When they reached a point beyond repair, sometimes a farmer found them a final resting place in a lonely fence corner on his farm. At other times he traded them in on newer, more efficient models.

Until the Ameliasburgh Museum Board decided to tackle the problem of preserving large heavy equipment for posterity, farm devices of yesteryear—threshing machines, fieldstone pickers, binders and steam—powered tractors and other harvesting paraphernalia—seemed doomed for the scrap and dump yards.

The latest addition to the township's growing collection of historical implements goes on exhibition when the museum complex opens July 1.

RCAF Celebration May Be a Final Fling

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Unification and age are taking their toll on the memory of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Early in World War I Canada was beginning to form its own air corps. By 1924 the fleet had been named Royal Canadian Air Force.

For the men who continue to fly Canadian aircraft, the tradition and sentiment of the old RCAF is part of the past, replaced by a unified, all-encompassing Canadian Armed Forces.

This weekend, second forces bases will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the RCAF though it exists only as a memory.

Col. Robert Busch, commanding officer of CFB Trenton, has seen and lived much of the RCAF story and says there probably won't be a 60th anniversary.

Unification, which took effect in 1968 has taken hold faster than I thought it would," says the colonel. "The men have integrated very quickly — more quickly than I would have expected."

Col. Busch points out it will be difficult for the armed forces to find enough men to celebrate the 60th anniversary.

Retirements are taking many RCAF veterans out of Canada's armed forces. The colonel feels the spirit of the corps will soon have to be carried on by RCAF associations alone. associations he says have "formidable strength in numbers."...

One base spokesman, still reminisce the pride of the RCAF said "The Royal Canadian Air Force will always be an important chapter of Canadian military history."

Both retired and active air force personnel and members of the general public are invited to attend celebrations at the base this weekend beginning Friday night with a dance and social evening in the base's Number Nine Hangar.

Saturday's highlight will be a parade at 2 p.m. on the square in front of base administration buildings.

Details of the competition will be distributed in schools in the next few days. Deadline for entries is May 17.

Posters will be judged in three division, junior, intermediate and senior. Included in the first category are grades three and four. The second category involves pupils in grades five and six and the final division includes pupils in grades seven and eight.

Big Bulk Carriers Go Round Cape Horn

If Suez Canal Opens Will It See Much Use in Future?

By JOHN D. HARRISON
Foreign Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

The re-opening of the Suez canal after seven long years of inaction and chronic fighting along its banks, is one of the major achievements of Dr. Kissinger's Arab-Israeli truce.

Closed since the 1967 Six Day War, which brought Israeli forces to its east bank on a permanent warlike basis, the Suez canal under Egyptian administration had been one of the most conspicuously managed and chronic fighting sores in the world's economy.

The re-opening of the Suez canal after seven long years of inaction and chronic fighting along its banks, is one of the major achievements of Dr. Kissinger's Arab-Israeli truce.

Closed since the 1967 Six Day War, which brought Israeli forces to its east bank on a permanent warlike basis, the Suez canal under Egyptian administration had been one of the most conspicuously managed and chronic fighting sores in the world's economy.

You will recall the late president Nasser seized the Suez canal from its largely foreign owners in 1956, thereby perpetrating the fiasco and brief second Arab-Israeli war of 1956.

Nationalization of the canal which was bitterly but unfairly attacked in the West, was in turn partially a result of the refusal of the late and fundamentalist U.S. Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles to give aid to Egypt to complement and help the present Aswan High Dam.

Dulles' action was a professional and anti-Communist to the point it was a personal religion with him, any violation of Soviet influence in Nasser's Egypt, no place for U.S. dollar or any other kind of American aid.

What Dulles thought he saw but which arrived after his death in 1961 with a vengeance, was massive Soviet economic aid which built the Aswan High Dam, combined with the well-known military aid. That has continued.

So Dulles lost. The West lost. The Middle East fought yet another war before the canal was finally freed from this burden of war and political power politics.

What is little known is that between 1956 and 1967 when the canal closed, the Egyptian administration, under Mahmoud Younes, the canal's brilliant director was the most efficient and most profitable in its history.

Engineer Younes with an able staff of European and Egyptian engineers, civilian administrators hired by the new canal state authority, did a much better job than the previous and predatory foreign owners of the canal had ever done.

The Americans are now deeply committed to clearing up the canal's debris of war, a highly dangerous assignment which requires the removal of hundreds of ships freighted along either shore, as well as mines in the waterway.

About a dozen foreign ships have been marooned in the Bitter Lakes, mainly because of the crews, believe it or not, since June, 1967. They could be prepared now for sailing at least.

But the greatest economic factor is the world shipping trends chiefly the quick move to the huge bulk carriers of above 250,000 deadweight tons, will have questionable value to canal as an essential gateway.

Deprived of the canal and with world demand for crude oil jumping enormously during the last 1960s, the world's shipyards have designed and built these monster floating platforms to go around the African continent, rather than by-pass it by using the canal.

And in any case, these giants today are much too large to pass any of the Suez canal when it opens again.

It is true much of the world's trade is still in the form of so-called cargo liners about the same size as ships which moved through the Suez canal before 1967. Its future therefore is uncertain.

Hospital Parking

Undigned letters are ineligible for publication in The Intelligencer, a fact made known in the Notice to Readers which appears on this page from time to time.

One such letter in recent days however makes a valid point. It has to do with the prospect of 95 fines being handed out for parking along the fire routes at Belleville General Hospital.

The writer points out: "I for one, among many others, take a person to physiotherapy three times a week. This person needs assistance to get to that floor. Where is one to park his car while performing this duty? All other space is being taken up either by staff parking or in the parking lots where one has to pay. Nowhere has any other drop-off area other than emergency been set aside. So if a person is say 15 minutes taking a person to the hospital for therapy, why should he come out and find a $5 fine on his windshield.

"I think some other arrangement could be made such as giving special permits to such persons who are in effect performing a social service for these people and yet are not getting any remuneration for it."

It is a good question and the hospital authorities are going to have to find an answer, perhaps along the lines the letter suggests.

That Word

A Belleville court decision that seemed to condone a singularly offensive four-letter word is provoking some further sharp reaction, as letters to this newspaper attest.

But to be realistic, the word has been around a long time and it is going to be with us as long as some find its intrinsic vulgarity necessary to their weakling ego.

Unhappily, one place the word takes root is in school — not in the classroom specifically, but among kids generally. It is here too that these same kids can decide for themselves that there are better modes of expression, and that the word can easily be dispensed with.

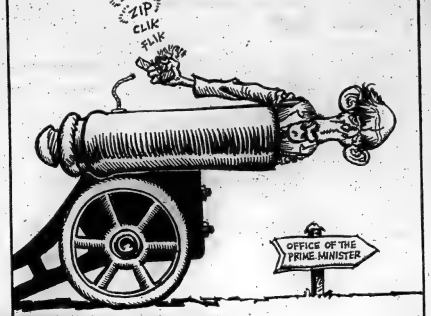
What is perhaps more startling these days than any best-forgotten cuss word is the astonishing array of sex-oriented paperback publications on sale these days.

It seems that once there were only the offerings of Xaviera Hollander and a series entitled The Sensuous Man (Woman . . . or Couple) and maybe a handful of others. Then the dam broke and bookshelves today are a veritable blizzard of erotica.

Canadians don't seem to be any the worse for this, or for any lack of control by municipalities or government of these offerings. Indeed doctors and psychologists will suggest it may even be beneficial in some respects. After all it is something of a statement on our times which the average person can view in mature fashion

Far worse, as we have suggested many times, are the delicate magazines with their lurid covers and material which could have a detrimental effect on the minds of some persons and provoke, as in kidnappings in the world scene, of late, imitative incidents.

Living Costs



Strike action at two Belleville plants is a reflection of the increased cost of living which is wreaking havoc with family budgets everywhere. The problem though these days is that the market situation is so fluid, where the worker and consumer are concerned, that today's pay packet is tomorrow's still further dated dollar. Costs up . . . then wages, this process to be repeated time and again, the dollar declining in value all the while. Everyone is in the same boat, but some are hurting more than others.

Growing Up!

Canadian Press has been circulating a picture of a Belleville bungalow en route to another site, but erroneously captioned it with the statement that it is the shake way for construction of the proposed Belleville General Hospital. What a pity the picture would not leave room for so much as a cottage hospital. Omitted of course were the words "parking garage."

Turner Urges Businessmen to Defend Profits

By VINCENT EGAN
Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

Finance Minister John Turner has called upon Canadian businessmen to stop being shrinking violets, and to resist ongoing charges of profiteering.

One such charge was made by his boss, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, in his debate on the speech from the throne that opened the current session of Parliament.

The New Democratic Party members will of course try to rescind the tax cut at the first opportunity. Both they and the leaders of some big labor unions appear to be out for the finance minister's scalp.

As if responding to Mr. Turner's call, the head of the Canadian Manufacturers Association just a few hours later made a detailed defence of corporate earnings in a speech to an audience of accountants in Kitchener, Ont.

Keith Rapsey's message. In brief, was that true profits are not nearly as high as they seem to be.

His argument—one, perhaps, that only accountants would fully savor—was that inflation creates illusory profits on the value of business inventories.

While corporate profits before taxes increased 91 per cent from 1970 to 1973, the CMA president said, the real increase was 26 per cent when the cost of replacing inventories — a process called "inventory valuation adjustment" by Statistics Canada) is taken into consideration.

An analogy could be drawn with the home-owner. The dollar value of the house may have risen substantially since 1970, but there would be no real profit in selling it and replacing it with a comparable house at today's prices.

To judge recent corporate performance against long-term trends, note that the annual growth of real corporate profits from 1953 to 1973 averaged 4.2 per cent.

The same annual growth rate over the same two decades is shown in the figures on "business fixed-capital formation" that is, investment in new plant and equipment.

Statistical interpretations aside, has the above-average profit increase of the past few years led to higher capital formation and thus greater job creation?

The CMA claims it has. Rapsey says that in the manufacturing sector alone, more than 113,000 jobs have been created in the past year. Latest figures show a 3.4 per cent year-to-year rise in the index of manufacturing employment.

The rate of growth of Canada's labor force has been accelerating, about 3.1 per cent a year since 1956 vs. 2 per cent in the 1947-61 period.

Labor-force growth will be very high throughout the 1970s," according to a demographic projection by economist G. Leigh Skene of Fry Hills Spence Ltd., a Toronto investment house.

It is essential that capital expenditures by business remain at a high level if there are to be enough jobs for the people entering the labor force in such large numbers during this decade.

And the figures confirm what common sense tells us: If a business earns more, it is likely to expand and hire more people.

In other words, profit is not necessarily a dirty word.

Housing Policy Opposition Target

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — Judging from the speech of leader Bob Nixon in the throne debate the Liberals apparently intend to try and zero in on housing in their criticism of the government.

And even to those who have been familiar with the problem some of the case he unveiled was startling.

We all know, for example, that housing costs have risen dramatically.

But even at that it was striking to learn that prices had risen 36 per cent last year in Metro Toronto, by 21 per cent in Hamilton and by the province at large by 26 per cent over the past three years.

Along with this there was the information that the pressures that have driven up prices so harshly in the Toronto area are now beginning to spread out through the province.

This started 18 months ago in St. Catharines, the Liberal leader said as one instance, and gradually it was spreading into most areas.

A new point to many people also would be that, at least in the opinion of Mr. Nixon, a lot of the injury has been caused by the inrush of foreign money.

Foreign money has been flooding into Ontario land buying and development. That we have known.

German, Swiss, U.S., Japanese and U.K. financiers have all found Ontario land a very attractive lure.

But what would be not commonly known and appreciated is that the lure has been so strong that 13 foreign-controlled companies now own half of the land available for building between Oshawa and Burlington.

The competition between the companies themselves has been fierce.

And this has both driven up the price and extended the area of concern.

Now the speculators are said to be moving into the north, and still more money is coming into the market from the Middle East.

Nixon has certain steps he suggests to meet the problem, including restrictions on foreign ownership of land, a government land servicing program and steps to reduce residential construction costs.

All are practical, though on past history it is doubtful if we will see them adopted on the scale that is needed.

Production Maintained

London Daily Express

The most remarkable achievement during the emergency three-day week has been the high level of output despite all the difficulties and restrictions. The average of production over-all is estimated at 70 per cent to 80 per cent . . . It is a truly remarkable record. There have been no mass business failures. In fact there have been bold management and workers — emerges from the emergency period with a keener edge to its competitiveness. . . If 70 per cent to 80 per cent can be reached in three days, what can be done in five days? If the new impetus can be maintained we shall have gone a long way towards curing the nation's economic ills.

Kamloops Mayor Says Flood Measures Are Inadequate

By STEVE KRUEGER

KAMLOOPS, B.C. (CP) — In the two years since flood waters ripped through the Kamloops subdivision and threatened hundreds of other homes little has been done to prevent future flood damage and Mayor Gordon Nicol blames the provincial government.

Mayor Nicol said in a recent interview that the provincial government has not lived up to its commitment to share part of the cost of a Thompson River Basin Diking Authority, which would build dikes around Kamloops.

"Other than a ban on new construction on the flood plain, the government just hasn't done anything. We aren't any better off today than we were two years ago. There is no question that we need a diking authority.

"We're lucky this year. There hasn't been much snow and the snow survey bulletin (issued by the provincial water rights branch) says the runoff shouldn't be too heavy."

On June 2, 1972, a sand dike at the south end of the then newly-opened Oak Hills subdivision and Oak Dale mobile home park failed, letting in millions of gallons of river water from the flood-crested North Thompson River.

More than 100 homes and 80 mobile homes were damaged in the flood. Damages were estimated as high as $12 million.

The provincial government organized an improvement district in the subdivision last summer to pay the $22,000-a-year maintenance cost on a new, engineered dike built last year.

Oak Hills, a part of the unincorporated area of Westsyde, had been developed with the permission of the B.C. highways department and Thompson Nicola Regional District.

Like most subdivision, homes, streets and sewers were inspected by authorities as they were built.

No one ever inspected the dike, however, because of a lack of clear jurisdiction by any government.

As the North and South Thompson Rivers receded, record levels in late May and the first 38 hours of June, 1972, residents of Oak Hills maintained the dike was sound and would resist the force of the water.

Shortly before 7 p.m., a passing water board truck driver noticed water bubbling up from a sandy area 50 feet inside the dike.

Called "piping," the sand was being washed by a force of water that had dug a tunnel beneath the dike that was widening every second.

Within 30 minutes, the entire development was flooded. It took six days to rescue the last stranded residents by boat but miraculously the only casualties were three people who suffered cut feet from walking over glass in the water.

Mayor Nicol and others said after the Oak Hills disaster that the area should be closed as a residential area.

He said it would cost more to repair the damaged homes and rebuild the dike than it would to take the land over and return the area to its original condition — a meandering area that became a swamp during every spring freshet period.

Today, a new dike has been built—this one designed by a team of Calgary engineers hired for their dike and canal construction.

The new dike is 2½ miles from the Oak Hills development, it cuts through the Westsyde Park just north of the subdivision and protects several hundred homes located on low land near the park.

The area now is within the newly expanded city and is the responsibility of the new municipal council.

Mayor Nicol was one of those who led the demand for a separate jurisdiction to prevent diking costs in Oak Hills.

He said the city had nothing to do with allowing the project to proceed and should not be liable to protect it from future flooding.

"We have prodded both Ottawa and Victoria to get going on a diking authority for years but they aren't doing anything," he said. "Oak Hills is the only place that is better protected than it was in 1972."

While the Oak Hills development was the only one actually flooded during the 1972 record flood crests, many other areas of Kamloops were under a watery siege for almost two weeks.

One of the areas that narrowly avoided a similar disaster was the suburb community of Brocklehurst, now a part of the city but a separate municipality at the time of the flooding.

Homes located in Brocklehurst at the river's edge sold compared prices from $35,000 to $75,000, while homes elsewhere sell for an average of $26,000.

At the entrance to the Oak Hills development stands a sign outlining the streets of the development. During the floods just 20 months ago that sign was nearly covered by murky river water.

Today, the sign carries a painted message: "Sold Out—But We Have Others".

Only one area appears to be destined for removal from the housing market—an area between the river and a large cattle park.

Mayor Nicol said the city is considering buying up the half-dozen homes and expanding the park to the river's edge.

He said there is "just no way to protect those homes."

CP News Roundup

Spending Triples In Decade

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government spent almost three times as much money this fiscal year as it did 10 years ago—almost $28 billion compared with $9.8 billion.

Even taking out the inflation factor, using unofficial figures based on the 1961 value of the dollar, federal spending rose more than 90 per cent, or nearly doubled, from $6.6 billion in 1963-64 the $12.6 billion forecast for the 1973-74 fiscal year that winds up at the end of this month.

Final supplementary spending estimates tabled in the Commons this month show a total authorized budget of $28.4 billion—in terms of today's shrunken dollars—for the waning fiscal year.

This is 23.7 per cent higher than the previous year's spending of $16.5 billion, and triple the figure 10 years ago.

The $29.4 billion budgeted for 1973-74 becomes $13.1 billion after eliminating the effects of inflation, 17.6 per cent higher than last year and 99 per cent greater than 10 years ago.

Offer Rejected

OTTAWA (CP) — A $1.5-million offer to the National Indian Brotherhood to draft a new Indian Act has been rejected, Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien said Tuesday night.

Mr. Chretien said his offer was accepted by Mr. Cardinal, but the brotherhood rejected it, saying it wanted all of the funds to come from the department.

Fares Set

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian transport commission Tuesday issued a fare list for a new Canadian National Railways passenger service between Barrie, Ont., and Toronto beginning Monday.

The transport commission said it reduced the proposed CN fares by 10 per cent and ordered special 40-trip adult and student ticket prices for the new service.

Set Price Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Broadcasting League Tuesday called on the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to consider implementing uniform cable television prices to ensure that a CRTC licence does not become "an automatic and accelerated path to riches."

Many Apply

TORONTO (CP) — A spokesman for the Council of Ontario Universities said Tuesday preliminary applications for admission received by March 15 show an 8.6-per-cent increase over last year.

The spokesman said "a very large number" of applications are coming from persons who have been out of Grade 13 for some time.

DARCY McKEOUGH

Conferences Said Useless

TORONTO (CP) — The need for a system of joint federal-provincial determination of energy policy "has become absolutely critical," Ontario Energy Minister Darcy McKeough said Tuesday.

Federal-provincial conferences do not work as a means of designing energy policy, he said in a speech on the eve of a conference in Ottawa between Prime Minister Trudeau and the provincial premiers on oil prices.

Land Curbs

REGINA (CP) — The Saskatchewan government unveiled a bill Tuesday to place tough restrictions on the amount of farmland that non-residents of the province can own.

Subject to a variety of exceptions, the bill says non-residents cannot own farmland worth more than $15,000 in assessed value for municipal tax purposes and no corporation may own more than 160 acres unless it is engaged in farming and 60-per-cent controlled by Saskatchewan residents who are farmers.

Tank Attacked

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence Minister James Richardson heard criticism of Canada's main battle tank from two opposition military critics Tuesday night, but refused to undertake to replace it.

George Hees (PC—Prince Edward Hastings) charged that the government is letting down the Canadian forces in Europe by providing them with inferior equipment.

Douglas Rowland (NDP—Selkirk) suggested replacing the broken-down Canadian Centurion tanks with a rent-a-tank system to acquire modern equipment for troops.

Rip-off

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Sign of the inflationary times in a music shop window: "Penny whistles—$2.99."

NDP Again Saves Liberal Government

OTTAWA (CP) — A two-day opposition harangue on government housing priorities died clamorously in the Commons Tuesday night when the New Democrats again saved the minority Liberals from defeat.

Ninety-two Conservative, three Social Credit and one NDP member supported a Conservative motion of non-confidence in the government, which was overcome easily by 194 Liberal, 27 NDP and nine Social Credit members. Totals showed 96 for the motion, 149 against.

The motion, by Elden Woolliams (PC—Calgary North), censured government plans to spend $100 million on a series of pilot projects in housing, transportation, sewage treatment and other city-related areas.

Opposition critics basically said housing is the country's No. 1 problem and the government should be providing shelter, not spending millions of dollars on more research.

The NDP maverick Tuesday was John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt), who broke ranks last December to oppose the government on an energy confidence vote.

His reason then was, "I just don't trust the bastards" and he adopted a similar stand Tuesday night.

NDP House Leader Stanley Knowles said earlier there was a chance his party would have supported the Conservative motion if the government had not extended the Veterans Land Act.

Veterans Affairs Minister Dan MacDonnell announced Tuesday a one-year extension of the program, which was to expire Sunday.

Corporation Tax Cuts Predicted by MacDonald

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. (CP) — The national president of the New Democratic Party predicted Tuesday that the Ontario government will reduce corporation taxes in its budget to be presented April 4.

Donald C. MacDonald, who also is the NDP member in the legislature for Toronto York South, said such a move means the government will either have to increase personal income tax or the retail sales tax to compensate for the lost corporate revenues.

Lewis, Nixon Critical

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario's two opposition leaders in the legislature were critical Tuesday of plans to ship garbage from Metropolitan Toronto out of town.

Liberal Leader Robert Nixon and Stephen Lewis, New Democratic Party leader, were attending a briefing on landfill dump sites in the province.

Cooking Chinese - Style

Going out for a Chinese dinner is a special treat for many families. But just as much fun can be had preparing a Chinese meal at home.

Many Chinese dishes require minimum cooking time, and so are frugal fuel-savers; as well as being exceptionally nutritious since vitamins have less time to disappear when cooking time shortens.

If you've never attempted cooking Chinese-style because you lacked ingredients, equipment or expertise, rest assured that to begin you can make many tasty dishes very easily.

The recipes here are for beginners, who need only purchase a little soy sauce and sharpen their kitchen knives to start.

If you progress to more complicated recipes (or are a culinary perfectionist at heart) you'll want to purchase a heavy cleaver which makes the slivering and slic-slicking necessary for stir-frying, a much easier, and faster process.

Although a wok — the traditional Chinese metal cooking pan with a round bottom — is the ideal utensil for stir-frying, an skillet will serve you just as well.

Some sort of steaming utensil — either a Chinese or Western style steamer — is essential once you embark on recipes calling for steamed vegetables, and is really the preferred way of cooking rice for all Chinese dishes.

Try a few of these recipes, and eventually you'll find yourself capable of making a Chinese dinner with several courses. You'll be feeling your family well, and having fun at the same time.

Clear Chicken Soup
1 chicken (5 to 7 lbs.)
2 quarts (+) cold water.
1 scallion (green onion)
2 tbsp. sherry
2 tsp. salt
2 or 3 slices fresh ginger

Wash the chicken (an old hen is preferred because it has more flavor than a young chicken) and put it in a heavy pot with the two quarts of water. Heat over high heat till it boils. Then add all other ingredients and turn to low heat to simmer for two hours.

Successful clear-soup making depends on keeping the heat low as soon as the boiling starts, since continued high heat would make the chicken tough and the soup murky.

At the end of the cooking time, remove the chicken. Sliced in small pieces and dipped in soy sauce, the chicken makes a delightful accompaniment to the soup. It can also be used in other main dishes, such as the Chop Suey.

Is Chop Suey a Chinese dish? The best answer seems to be that although it didn't originate in China, it was first associated by the Chinese who migrated to America. The ingredients were as close a facsimile to native Chinese delicacies as they could find in this new land. The process of selective evolution continued over a span of years until eventually a number of "standard" chop suey recipes have won their place on Chinese restaurants menus forever.

You can make your own chop suey from ingredients already in your kitchen, with the addition of bean sprouts — either canned or fresh. Many supermarkets now carry plastic packages of fresh sprouts in the vegetable section, or you can easily grow your own in a few days. If you use canned, open the can several hours before, drain the sprouts, and soak them in cold water to make them sweet and crisp.

Chop Suey
1 lb. beef, ham, chicken or shrimp (see note).
1 cup bean sprouts
½ cup fresh mushrooms sliced
¼ cup carrot slices
¼ cup celery slices
¼ cup onion slices
2 tomato cut in wedges
2 tbsps. peanut or corn oil
2 tbsps. soy sauce
1 tbsp. dry sherry
1 tsp. sugar
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. monosodium glutamate
2 tbsps. cold water
1 tbsp. cornstarch dissolved in 1 tbsp. cold water

(Note: This is a chance to use leftover meat. Slice your beef, chicken or ham into thin pieces about two inches by ¼ inch by ½ inch. Sprinkle with the sherry and one tbsp. soy sauce, and let sit for at least 10 minutes before using in the chop suey. If you are using canned shrimp, drain and wash them before sprinkling with the marinating mixture.)

Heat the oil in a skillet (or wok) over high heat, and add onions, celery, carrots and mushrooms, sliced as thinly as possible. Stir until oil coats all the vegetables, about two minutes.

Still over high heat, add the remaining soy sauce, sugar, salt, and mcnosodium glutamate. Stir again.

Add two tbsp. water, turn heat to medium, cover and cook for two more minutes. Mix in the bean sprouts and slices of meat. Stir.

Chinese Sauce for Spareribs
¼ jar of plum jam (or brambleberry or grape jelly)
one-third cup corn syrup
one-third cup soy sauce
¼ cup chopped green onions
½ tsp. garlic powder (or chopped garlic clove)
1 tsp. ground ginger

Mix all these ingredients in a heavy pan and simmer for 20 minutes.

Pour this sauce over pre-steamed spareribs in a heavy casserole, and bake in a slow (250 degrees) oven for an hour or more. An easy main dish for supper, delicious served with steamed rice or fried rice.

Fried Rice
¼ cup salad oil
2 cups cold cooked rice
3 eggs, beaten
2 cooked bacon slices, crumbled
2 tbsp. soy sauce
one-eighth tsp. pepper
½ green onions, sliced

Heat oil in heavy skillet. Over medium heat saute the rice, stirring lightly till browned (about 5 minutes). Stir the eggs into the rice and stir constantly as the mixture cooks. (about three minutes). Then stir in the bacon, soy sauce and pepper. Serve, garnished with green onions.

Among the curios of the Chinese kitchen are these Tea Eggs which are hard-boiled eggs beautifully flavored with spices, and delicately mottled with the color of tea. These might make a special variation for your Easter eggs this year!

Tea Eggs
1 dozen eggs
½ cup ordinary black tea leaves
2 sticks cinammon
3 or 4 pieces "star" anise (or anise seeds)
4 tablespoons soy sauce
¼ tsp. monosodium glutamate (optional)
1 tbsp. salt
½ tbsp. sugar

Place the eggs in a cooking utensil and let cold water run on them. Bring them to a boil slowly so that the shells will not break. When the water boils, reduce the heat and simmer about 15 minutes. Let cool, then drain.

Using the back of a heavy large spoon, crack the eggs all over but do not peel.

Place the eggs in a large kettle and add enough water to cover. Add the remaining ingredients and bring to a boil. Partially cover and cook the eggs at least two and a half hours. Drain, cool, and refrigerate. Peel and cut into wedges to serve.

ANYONE FOR BUTTONS . . .

YORKTON, Sask. (CP) — Mrs. Jake Meekma would like to dispose of her buttons but no one wants them. Mrs. Meekma, 78, began collecting buttons in 1942 and now has 12,000 of them—hoop and horn, wood, metal, smoke and salivator pearl, mirror back, celluloid, blood, glass, crystal and jet buttons.

Try Stir-Frying

This stir-fried meal is made from strips of pork tenderloin thinly sliced and quickly cooked in oil, combined with sliced onions, mushrooms, green peppers and celery, also cooked rapidly over high heat. The addition of other vegetables, such as beans or bean sprouts is up to the cook and what she has available. Served with rice, this makes a good main course for a Chinese meal. Ann Landers

Young Mistress Fears Lover's Heart Attack

Dear Ann Landers: Something has been bothering me. I can't get it out of my mind. I don't dare ask anyone else. Please give me some advice.

A well-to-do married man has been helping me for three years. He is 52 years my senior and treats me like a queen. He made it clear when he set up this "arrangement" that we could never marry. His wife is a nice person, but dull and undiscerning. His children are grown and leading their own lives. Although we never appear together in public, a few people suspect we are seeing each other.

Five months ago R. had a serious case of indigestion. It happened in my apartment and I was terrified. I thought it was a heart attack. I called a friend who is a physician, explained the circumstances, and he came over immediately. By the time he arrived, R. was feeling better.

Now I am haunted by the fear that one of these nights R. might have a real heart attack in my apartment. What on earth would I do? I am not concerned about my reputation, but I am plenty worried about his. Please help me.—Lady In Waiting

Dear Lady: If your friend should have a heart attack in your apartment, you would follow the same procedure as when he had indigestion. If he has a massive coronary and dies on the spot, you couldn't do much about saving his reputation. If he has a less serious attack, your doctor friend could drive him to the hospital and think up something on the way.

Dear Ann Landers: Quite unplanned, at a party recently, I decided not to drink any liquor because we had arrived late and the guests were just being seated. (Ordinarily I would have hurried to the bar and taken a double martini to the table.)

I enjoyed the dinner conversation immensely and decided to see what it would be like to go through an entire evening with no booze. Usually I take at least two drinks to "loosen me up."

I had a marvelous time on ginger ale and concluded that "getting loosened up" actually means getting shamelessly, hilariously exhausted at an early hour and begging my husband to take me home.

We were nearly the last to leave and I wasn't the least bit tired. I enjoyed some stimulating conversation with non-drinkers, danced better than I ever had before and loved being me instead of behaving in a raucous and aggressively sexy manner.

Dear Ann Landers: My wife became pregnant by my best friend. Needless to say, that ended the friendship. He checked out of the picture and I had to fly my wife to another state for an abortion. It cost me over $1,000 plus the grief.

The best I was was very "understanding" and stood by him. Our marriage was badly damaged but we are trying to work things out. Our three children have no idea why their parents let town so suddenly.

I say this jerk owes me $500. Please agree and print this letter so I can shake it in his face.—Mad

Dear Mad: Sorry, but when a married woman gets into a jam like that, the problem is hers to work out as best she can. When her lover is a heel, she pays double.

Successful Living

Clinics for 'Older Women'

By DORIS CLARK

Dear Doris: Are there any clinics for older women? We are going to start one here. All this is the result of my seeing a doctor and not being given a chance to ask questions.

Instead I was asked if I had problems at home. Yes, I had problems at home. I was the problem.

There are films and literature available on change of life. I feel help such as this should be available to all women and our clinic will lessen the work load for our minister.

They are all for it and so are any women I've talked to. — Past Forty (Northern Ontario).

Dear Past Forty: It should lighten the load for your social worker too. A woman often needs something different from a doctor than medicine, doesn't she?

I do not know of any clinics which are specifically for the "past forty" problem — the menopause but the right kind of health clinic ought to make room for the depressed, troubled older woman who is finding the change of life more than she can take.

My 23-part booklet, "Facing Forty", has been a help to many hundreds. It was worked out in consultation with a gynecologist; if you could use a supply they could be purchased at a special rate.

Good luck to your clinic. Let's hear more about it — and let's hear from readers in other parts of Canada about how their past-forties are being helped.

Dear Doris: A short time ago I wrote to you about a man I had been having relations with, yet failed to "turn me on." But he found me quite exciting — I couldn't figure out why, because I am plump and not very attractive.

Anyway, you helped me to see that sexual relations should be an expression of love — and that it was not likely I would achieve real physical expression with him.

I have now called off the affair with this man. I guess you just helped me to smarten up and really see him for what he was. — Plain Jane.

Dear Jane: Good for you! It is a smart person who can take another's advice.

I recall pointing out that it was foolish for you to criticize yourself for not finding this selfish man attractive. Perhaps for a while you kept hoping some sort of spark would light!

Too bad . . . but you'll be a bit more choosy next time.

Summer School Offered in PEI

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP) — The Atlantic Canada Institute's summer school at University of Prince Edward Island is not run-of-the-mill and the 1974 session promises to be as varied as ever.

The Institute's program includes courses on the sea and ships, folk history and writing in the Atlantic provinces.

The courses are informal to the point where there is nothing to prevent a professor from taking his soap-box down to the beach and lecturing to the bodies on the sand, the Institute says.

Each program lasts a week, carries no university credits and is open to all.

"If you're interested, you're eligible," said Prof. William Prouty, president of ACI. "To vacationers, we say: 'Give up your mornings and the teachers can have you in the afternoons.'"

Professors, too, enjoy the opportunity to "talk their heads off" to an interested and voluntary audience.

ACI was founded last year by a group of professors at universities in the region who sensed an increasing public interest in the Atlantic area of Canada.

The first summer program was held at St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, N.S.

This year, said Prof. Prouty, an English teacher at Dalhousie University in Halifax, the institute is aiming its primary appeal at vacationers who enjoy learning about the region and this island province in particular.

Most interest is expected in courses on the program about the sea and ships. Other courses will look at Indian art and the Acadians.

It will cost participants $5 to register and $30 a week for the courses, with a family rate of $95 a week. The director of ACI is Charlottetown accepts fabrics.

Automatics Easier

LONDON (CP) — A two-month series of tests has established that cars with automatic transmissions impose significantly less stress on drivers than those with manual gear shifts, says a firm that manufactures automatic systems.

In the tests, carried out by a medical team for the manufacturers, Automotive Products and British Leyland, electrocardiograph machines were wired to the wrists and ankles of 21-year-old male girls who drove identical cars, one with manual transmission, the other

After 4,000 miles of driving during which the girls switched cars, the driver of the automatically-equipped car had an average pulse rate of 85 to the minute and the manual driver's rate averaged about 107.

The doctors said a beat of more than 90 indicates stress.

The research team said the manual driver's pulse rate was higher even when the difficulties of driving in traffic were removed by using a test track.

After 60 years of making encyclopedias for adults, Funk & Wagnalls has learned enough to make one for children.

It's called the Young Students Encyclopedia. And it's designed to do something more than just get them through the next homework assignment—to make them want to learn on their own.

Instead of burdening your children with tons of forgettable detail, it appeals to their native curiosity. The article on Airplanes, for example, illustrates an experiment children can perform at home showing how things fly. There are hundreds of other drawings, games and puzzles that not only teach but provoke, involve and entertain in the process.

In other words, it's an encyclopedia children will actually use. They'll also use it a long time. It's designed to be simple enough for children just learning to read and comprehensive enough to serve until they're ready for an adult encyclopedia. They can't outgrow it the way they do shoes.

Which brings up another nice point about the Young Students Encyclopedia: it's intended exclusively to help children, but it helps grown-ups too.

First, it doesn't put much of a dent in your budget. Since it's sold direct to you through us, you can buy the complete 20-volume set a volume or two a week for only $1.89 each. And the first volume for the introductory price of twenty nine cents.

Second, it helps prevent you from doing what you shouldn't be doing anyway—your children's homework. It provides the answers; you just provide the encouragement.

So instead of just shopping for things to nourish growing bodies, come in and pick up a Young Students Encyclopedia. And nourish their minds as well.

North Sea Oil May Last For 30 Years

LONDON (CP) — A director of British Petroleum predicts that if the present rate of discovery continues under the North Sea, oil reserves there will be large enough to meet Britain's needs for more than 30 years.

Dr. Jack Birks told a parliamentary committee on science and technology reserves already proved indicate that North Sea oil can be brought ashore at the rate of one million to 1½ million barrels a day. The company plans to start production from its Forties field next year.

Dr. Birks said this rate of production would be equal to about half the oil consumption in the United Kingdom.

"But in the still unexplored sector of the North Sea there could be a further 20 billion barrels if future exploration is as successful as the last three years have been."

Some 400 exploration wells have been drilled in the North Sea and the number of rigs operating has reached 28. Forty-nine rigs of a new generation are on order, many of them capable of drilling in waters more than 1,000 feet deep.

LINES BUILT

Transmission lines from the Churchill Falls power development to the Hydro-Quebec system took five years to build at a cost of $950 million.

Family Attempted To Obtain Inquest

SUDBURY (CP) — A lawyer for the family of a 16-year-old girl who died in Sudbury General Hospital last June described Tuesday the family's unsuccessful attempts to have an inquest called last summer.

Richard Pharand, representing the family of Susan Dupuis, told a five-man jury investigating 23 deaths at the hospital last year that he has letters showing the family's requests for an inquest soon after the girl's death June 3.

At least one of the 23 deaths has been attributed to misconnection of medical gas outlets in four rooms of the hospital's new emergency wing where oxygen wall outlets were discovered in late September, 1973, to be emitting nitrous oxide.

"If a proper investigation had been performed, perhaps the problem could have been discovered and other deaths avoided," Mr. Pharand said.

Twice during Tuesday's hearing the lawyer attempted to introduce the letters as evidence, but his request was denied by Ontario's deputy chief coroner, Dr. Rosa Benedi, who is presiding at the inquest, now in its 10th week.

Dr. Benedi ruled that the letters were not admissible at this time, but he added he will consider entering them as exhibits after testimony is heard from expert medical witnesses concerning the Dupuis girl's death.

Mr. Pharand said the provincial coroner's office in Toronto accepted without requiring expert medical evidence the report it received concerning the girl's death from Sudbury Coroner Dr. M. J. Prevost.

Dr. Howard Tait, who treated the Dupuis girl, said he "was rather surprised and extremely upset at the whole turn of events," at the time the girl died.

Subsidy for Eggs Sought

TORONTO (CP) — John Hyde of Dundas, Ont., provincial representative to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, said Tuesday the agency has asked the federal government to consider a temporary subsidy to Canadian producers based on the cost of imported eggs.

Mr. Hyde, a director of the Ontario Egg Producers' Marketing Board, told the board's annual meeting the subsidy is one of three proposals submitted to Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan last weekend.

Federal amendments currently before the Commons will provide for regulation of imported eggs, but will take three to six months before implemented, he said, and steps are needed now to protect egg producers from low United States prices.

The agency also suggested that alternatives to the subsidy would be an embargo on imports or a surcharge.

Mr. Hyde said Mr. Whelan told agency officials the cabinet will decide what steps to take, if any, at a meeting Thursday.

He said he favors a subsidy that would pay producers the difference between the wholesale price of eggs in New York and the Canadian cost of production, minus seven cents the cost of transportation.

In an interview, he said the subsidy at current prices would be eight cents on account large and eight cents on a dozen large cents in New York and 72 cents in Canada. The subsidy would be the government's $500,000 sweetener but would vary with changing prices.

Mr. Hyde said he favors the subsidy because it would lower the cost of eggs to consumers while offering producers adequate returns and help marketing agencies reduce the amount of eggs produced in excess of quota targets.

In Ontario, egg producers are charged a total of four cents a dozen in levies to collect surplus eggs for later sale.

The subsidy, Mr. Hyde said, would apply only to eggs produced within the quotas and therefore be an incentive to farmers not to produce surpluses.

Last year it cost the board $1.37 million to collect surplus eggs, on which $2.86 million was collected in levies. However, part of that total was allocated to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency.

Delegates to the two-day meeting passed a resolution asking the provincial government to change legislation and permit the board to set production quotas.

Board Chairman James John, stone of Alliston, Ont., said current legislation only gives the board authority to regulate marketing. If production quotas are established, the cost of collecting surplus eggs would be reduced.

Pilot Survives 2 Nights in Bush

ENSO, Ont. (CP) — A 46-year- Tripacer that went down Saturday. Winnipeg pilot who spent two subzero nights in Northern about 70 miles north of the Ontario woodlands following the crash Saturday of his light plane, has been released from hospital.

A hospital spokesman in this community 90 miles south at Kenora said Albert Boulton was treated for hunger, exposure and a scalp wound that required 12 stitches to close.

DRIFTING HOME — Pierre Berton.

Mr. Berton gives a moving account of a trip he and his family made last summer down the Yukon River on rubber rafts. They were following the gold rush trail from Lake Bennett, British columbia, to Dawson, Yukon. It is also a book about Bertel's own children and his relations with them. He writes with great sensitivity.

A BIRD OF PROMISE — Gregory Clark.

The anecdotes in "A Bird of Promise" have been selected from Mr. Clark's popular magazine articles between the years of 1967 and 1972. He writes about his days as a newspaper reporter, and his stories are all filled with wit, warmth and wisdom.

DIVAS — Winthrop Sargeant.

Mr. Sargeant gives brief profiles of Joan Sutherland, Marilyn Horne, Brigit Nilsson, Leontyne Price and Eileen Farrell, all of whom he feels "belong to a golden age of their own." He goes into the personality of sopranos, who are, he says, usually healthy and happy people.

WALK A LONELY ROAD — Joyce Stranger.

Dave Martin, a police officer, has suffered a lot of tragedies. His wife has died, his child had to go and live with grandparents, and then his boy Royal is killed in a knife fight with thugs. One day he comes across a stray dog that has been maltreated, and as in his training and the dog that he adopts him against the advice of all his colleagues who believe that he will never be able to train him as a police dog. Dave persists in his training and the dog finally proves himself in dangerous circumstances.

THE DEADLY STROKE — Warren Tute.

In July 1940 the Royal Navy attacked and largely destroyed the French Fleet in the harbor of Mersel Kebir. Only a few weeks before, the French and British had been allies in the war against Germany, and in France the action was murderous aggression. The author traces the events of those unhappy days: the Royal Navy steaming toward its target; the ten-minute bombardment that shattered the French Fleet and killed 1,300 sailors.

In 1773, Johnson and Boswell conducted their celebrated tour of the Highlands and Islands of Western Scotland. Two centuries later Paul Johnson, a former editor of the 'New Statesman' and George Gale, present editor of the "Spectator", decided to follow in their steps. A lovely book on the Highlands, written with intelligence and wit.

French Water Costs More Than Red Wine

PARIS (AP) — Even though he has been told the stuff from the kitchen tap is as good or better, the Frenchman remains the world's largest consumer of bottled water and is paying more for it than ordinary wine.

Selling bottled water to the French is a major growth industry that largely depends on advertisements contending that tired kidneys and livers need daily baths of mineral water.

But tests by consumer groups and independent laboratories have shown that there are widely used table waters that do not meet the purity standards enforced by the government for water from municipal systems.

From 1950 to 1971, the annual production of bottled water in France rose from 500,000 to two billion litres. This means that in 1971 every French adult was drinking 67 litres of mineral water a year, compared to 110 litres of wine. Next year, the National Statistics Institute says, the average Frenchman is expected to increase his bottled water intake to 83.41 litres. A litre is 1.057 quarts.

In a typical cafe in Paris, a 7½-ounce carafe of house red wine costs the equivalent of 20 cents. A bottle of water about the same size costs 40 cents.

How did the bottlers develop advertising campaigns to the point of getting people to buy something they can get at no cost at all?

They have capitalized on a French obsession with kidney and liver trouble and coupled it with generalized scorn for tap water. A Frenchman is likely to tell you: "I know who does what in that river and no matter how they say purify it, I'm not going to let a drop enter my body."

The ads show streams and trees and blue skies and have asked questions like: "Today, can you deprive your child of this purity?" One of the best-selling table waters even announced, to the incredulity of physicians, that it had a calcium-magnesium ratio approximating that of the blood.

This year Vittel Water placed an ad in newsmagazines like L'Express and in Elle, the leading women's weekly, depicting a naked man urinating while swigging Vittel water from the bottle.

The ad agency said there had been almost no negative reaction to the layout.

Earlier, some of the French consumer protection organizations began to put the waters in test tubes to see what was actually being offered to the public.

The Co-operative Analysis and Research Laboratory found that a mineral water sold in grocery stores contained seven times as much sulphate as would be tolerated in a municipal water supply.

The Federal Consumption Union, a non-profit organization which publishes a monthly bulletin and buying guide, found that the second-biggest-selling bottled water contained too much magnesium and calcium.

The tests were made in 1970. Daniel Stones, an editor of the bulletin, said a new series had been completed for an article to appear this year, and that the findings were that this water now had an excessive sulphate content.

Furthermore, Stones told a reporter, the plastic bottlement of the water comes to create bacteriological problems.

"A spokesman for the company brushed aside the studies, saying: "Millions of people have been drinking millions of bottles of our water for years. I don't know of anyone who is worried."

MOSS USED

Irish moss, gathered mainly on the shores of Prince Edward Island, is used in the chemical and paint industries, and as a stabilizer in certain foods.

Ontario Scholar Denied Admission

Charlotte Clarke will graduate as an Ontario Scholar from Moira Secondary School this June.

But she isn't good enough for entrance to St. Lawrence College's nursing faculty in Kingston next fall.

Her problem is one of geography. St. Lawrence, her first choice of nursing school, won't accept students from outside the six counties served by the college. She can't get into Loyalist, because Loyalist was her second choice on her application form, and Loyalist will consider only those who make the college their first choice.

"We get more than we can use," says Loyalist registrar Jim Hemsley. Loyalist has about 150 first-choice applications for its 76 places in first-year nursing. Unlike St. Lawrence, Loyalist will accept applications from any qualified student (grade 12 graduates) in Ontario.

A 1973 directive from the ministry of colleges and universities says community colleges must accept applications from all Ontario residents.

"We follow the law," says Jim Hemsley.

But St. Lawrence in Kingston will accept nursing school applications only from residents of Frontenac, Leeds, Grenville, Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry counties and some townships in the southeastern part of Lennox and Addington.

She listed George Brown and Ryerson colleges in Toronto as second and third choices on her application and has been accepted by what she wants to go to Kingston, where her grandmother lives — a city "like a second home to us," says her mother.

Charlotte applied to St. Lawrence Jan. 4 and found out Monday, March 25, that she would not be considered for admission. She had to wait, on her own initiative, an interview with registrar J. T. Kelly, to get the bad news.

A high school guidance counsellor in Belleville, deeply immersed in the nursing school dilemma of this spring, protested St. Lawrence's Kelly and was told that hospital boards in Kingston pressured the academic advisory committee to limit nursing first-choice enrolments to residents of the counties served by the board. So grade 12 students from the eastern Ontario counties get preference over Ontario Scholars like Charlotte who live just west of the boundary line.

Elaine Gutoskie, a classmate of Charlotte's at Moira, has had a similar experience. Until Charlotte came back Monday from her abortive interview at St. Lawrence, Elaine had no idea she wasn't in the running at the nursing school of her choice, St. Lawrence.

Elaine had been accepted at Cornwall in Stormont and went for a personal interview March 1. On March 20 she received notice of her acceptance. Not wanting the added expense of living in a large metropolitan area, she had been inclined to ignore her Centennial acceptance until she learned of the chaotic situation in nursing education this year in Ontario.

Centennial said yesterday that it had not yet selected all its 200 students from its 900 applicants, but was giving preference to grade 13 grads.

During her interview, Elaine was told that Centennial took marks and personality into consideration in its selections.

Elaine's third choice was Loyalist, and she has yet to get any communication from the college.

Ontario Scholar Charlotte Clarke was merely hedging her bets in applying to community colleges. She wants to take a bachelor of science in nursing degree from university, preferably Queen's.

Early last fall she learned that Queen's has 500 applicants for its 50 places in the Collaborative Nursing course. Queen's will notify candidates of their acceptance or rejection in May. But in the meantime, community colleges insist on non-refundable deposits of $35 from accepted candidates.

Mrs. Owen Clarke, Charlotte's mother, is indignant about deposits.

"It's all politics, I realize that," says Mrs. Clarke. But she resents having to pay $70 to reserve her daughter's acceptance into one of two community colleges while she awaits the decision of the university that is her child's first choice.

"All students at Ontario have paid for the community colleges, and then we have to pay an extra tariff to hold spaces for our children as well," she complains. "The colleges will fill up faster than the universities," says Mrs. Clarke.

Retiring City Clerk Honored

Members of the Belleville Parking Authority paid tribute Tuesday evening to City Clerk Adam Stalker, longtime administrator who now is soon to retire from his city hall office.

Mr. Stalker was guest of honor at a joint meeting of a six-member authority and representatives of the downtown merchants on the board of management for downtown development, and was presented with a portable stereo tape player.

City Clerk Stalker has been secretary of the Parking Authority since its inception 13 years ago and authority chairman Cleo Colling said that it was to a great extent through the efforts, experience and patience of the "docile Scotsman" that the authority was in the fine position it is today.

The presentation to Mr. Stalker was made by Mrs. Daryl Manderville and Douglas Dunmie, the other two members of the parking authority.

In April of the following year he entered the employ of the city as clerk of works, a position he held until 1954.

He then became building inspector, and assistant to then city engineer Charles Mott, and in 1956 was named superintendent of public works.

In June 1959, following the death of Mrs. Anne Hardy, clerk, a position he has since held.

In retrospect, Mr. Stalker notes the city and its administration has come a long way in the past 15 years.

When he became city clerk, the clerk's office had a staff of three — the clerk and two office workers.

Today there is a staff of eight in the clerk's office — city clerk, deputy clerk, clerk's assistant and five stenographers.

Again looking back, Mr. Stalker recalls that in early days as clerk he was the first witness called at the judicial inquiry into the city's financial position and the recommendations of the Belleville McFarlands senior hockey team.

After one-and-a-half days on the stand, he was appointed inquiry clerk by Judge J. E. Wilson.

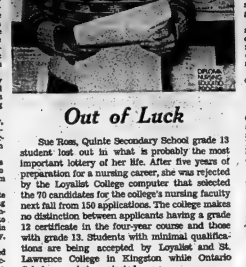
Also at last night's meeting, parking authority chairman Colling announced that this year would be his last in public service.

He said he had served 15 years on the city parks board and 12 years on the parking authority and felt he had fulfilled his public service obligation to the city.

Out of Luck

Sue Ross, Quinte Secondary School grade 13 student, lost out in what is probably the most important lottery of her life. After five years of preparation for a nursing career, she was rejected by the Loyalist College computer that selected the 70 candidates for the college's nursing faculty next fall from 150 applications. The college makes no distinction between applicants having a grade 12 certificate in the four-year course and those with grade 13. Students with minimal qualifications are being accepted by Loyalist and St. Lawrence College in Kingston while Ontario Scholars are being rejected.

Nurses to Debate Admission Issue



With the announcement of its 49th annual convention in Toronto in May, the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario jumped into the battle over admission standards in community colleges.

The convention will debate a resolution that asks the ministry of colleges and universities to rescind its grade 12 admission standard for nursing students.

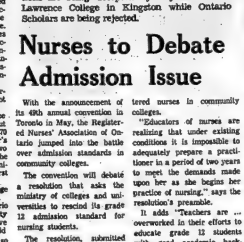
The resolution, submitted by the West Algoma Chapter of RNAO, also called for a longer period of training for students qualifying at registered nurses in community colleges.

"Educators of nurses are realizing that under existing conditions it is impossible to adequately prepare a practitioner in a period of two years to meet the demands made upon her as she begins her practice of nursing," says the resolution's preamble.

It adds "Teachers are ... overwrought in their efforts to educate grade 12 students with good academic background so that they can accept the responsibility inherent in the practice of contemporary nursing."

Hasty Pees Have A New RSM

CWO William R. Vallance became the seventh regimental sergeant major of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment since his activation of hostilities of World War II at a ceremony held in Peterborough recently.



RSM Vallance was presented with the brass badges of rank by Lt.-Col. J. A. Richardson, Commanding Officer of the Regiment following the annual inspection.

The badges were originally presented to RSM Angus B. Duffy in 1940 by the late Lt.-Col. Bruce Sutcliffe who was later killed in action in Sicily.

RSM Vallance also received the traditional RSM's sword and cane and became chief custodian of the Regimental Bottle Flag which is kept in the Sergeants' Mess.

The Regiment was inspected by Colonel R. Lewis, District Commander, Toronto Militia District, to which the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment now belongs, they were accompanied on the parade by Mrs. Lewis.

Thanks for Long Service

Nursing Career Dream Shattered by Red Tape

By LENNY WILLIAMSON
Staff Reporter

Lifelong dreams of a nursing career are shattering this spring for young women graduating from grade 13.

Their extra year of high school and honor graduation diploma are saddled by a hindrance to their admission to community college nursing schools.

Take Sue Ross, for example.

LIFE'S AMBITION

The pretty, 19-year-old Quinte Secondary student always wanted to be a nurse, specializing in pediatrics. From the time she entered high school her path was charted — a five year academic course, concentration in the sciences, especially biology, and graduation with the 70 candidates for the college's nursing faculty next fall from 150 applications. The college makes no distinction between applicants having a grade 12 certificate in the four-year course and those with grade 13. Students with minimal qualifications are being accepted by Loyalist and St. Lawrence College in Kingston while Ontario Scholars are being rejected.

"The department of colleges and universities sets the standards, not us," she repeats for the fifth time.

That's no comfort to Sue Ross, who applied only to Loyalist and Sir Sanford Fleming in Peterborough. Admissions closed Feb. 15.

Confident her high marks would guarantee her admission to Loyalist, Sue turned down the opportunity to write a qualifying exam for Sir Sanford. This is a four-hour exam, written in Peterborough at a cost of $18. To cover cost colleges who claim to follow ministry guidelines to the letter, have no such qualifying exam.

'TOO LATE NOW'

So Sue is out in the cold, number 80 on the waiting list at Loyalist. Those on the waiting list are also chosen by "computer random sample."

Unable to believe the March 18 rejection letter from Loyalist, Sue telephoned registrar Jim Hemsley. "Mr. McCann" at the college.

"Yes, he confirmed, all qualified applicants' numbers were humped together and 70 picked at random until all vacancies were filled. The computer can be programmed to do the job in a sophisticated "two human hands" operation.

The college has opened nursing to grade 13 grads, including those in the four-year course that terminates with a graduation certificate. That is the type of student community colleges were set up to cater to, she was told.

Then why does a person take grade 13?" asked a bewildered Sue.

"I don't know" replied Mr. McCann. "I think it's a waste of time."

"This puts schools in a difficult position, says a high school guidance department head.

"How do we show the kids that hard work and academic achievement pay off?"

COUNSELLORS BITTER

Guidance counsellors are bitter about the rejection of grade 13 students by community colleges. They should have been warned about the changed admission requirements they say, before the date admissions closed. Had they been aware of the shift in community requirements across the province, in any meaningful way, they would have steered candidates to appropriate colleges, such as those for those who still give preference to academic achievement.

By throwing open the doors of nursing to all grade 13 graduates, regardless of the courses they took, grade 12 grads are in effect being penalized for their extra year of education.

ODDS AGAINST

There are more grade 12 grads than grade 13 grads. In a lottery-type selection procedure the chances for 12 odds are against the grade 13 students.

This stings Loyalist's Jim Hemsley hotly denies.

Some guidance teachers wonder whether new admission procedures will do to the standards of nursing.

Sue Ross has her doubts too. A friend, now completing her first year of nursing at Loyalist, told Sue "if you haven't got your grade 13 biology, forget it." The anatomy course is tough enough to demand senior biology as a prerequisite, she said.

"What's going to happen next fall, when those grade 12 graduates can't back it and drop out?" asks Sue.

Several Quinte students in the four-year grade 13 course, who have marks in the high 80 to 90 per cent, have been accepted in nursing at Loyalist.

Until this year, say guidance counsellors every qualified grade 13 graduate who chose nursing was placed in a hospital training school. This year they're out of luck.

Nursing Education Formula Changing

When she held the same position at Edith Cavell Regional School of Nursing at Belleville General Hospital, she had a hand in the number of directors across the province, selected students for the college academic qualifications.

The government won't support training the sort of the new policy at Loyalist of accepting all applicants who has agrade 12 certificate.

Mrs. Flindall doesn't set the admission procedure. The ministry of health dictates the number of student nurses hospitals in the area consider they can handle for practical training. The ministry of colleges and universities sets the admission policy, she says.

Motivation and maturity are the most important factors in determining the suitability of nursing candidates, says Mrs. Flindall. The grade 13 graduate "is not ready for one-of schooling, is more mature than the holder of a grade 12 certificate," she admitted.

Mrs. Flindall suggested university courses leading to a degree to grade 13 students she interviewed, but "they don't want to take four years preparation."

A community college course leading to a registered nurse diploma requires two years preparation. Students spend three days a week in the classroom and two days in hospitals the first year. The second year they have three days a week in hospitals and two in the college. Their hospital time is in the operating room, labor room, out patient clinic.

"When we graduated, we were qualified to work anywhere in a hospital," says Mrs. Flindall of the hospital-trained nurses of her era.

"It's different today. Registered nurses are qualified to work in the surgical and pediatric nursing. If they want to work in labor rooms, intensive care units, emergency or obstetrics, they must take further training. Service training in the selected specialty."

Three types of nurses are emerging in the 1970s. The first is the university-trained nurse, who graduates with a bachelor of science in nursing after four years. The second is the community college trained RN. The third is the registered nursing assistant, also from community colleges in a one-year course requiring grade 10 for admission.

"There is quite a distance between the university-prepared nurse and the college-prepared," says Mrs. Flindall. "There will probably be a bigger division between the degree nurse and the RN than now exists between the RN and the nursing assistant."

Expert to Be Speaker On Hearing Impairment

Guest speaker at the next meeting of the Quinte Association for Hearing-Handicapped Children will be Dr. J. O. Darbyshire, who is director of audiological services at OSD.

The meeting is to be held Wednesday, April 3 at 8 p.m. in the Teacher Education Centre.

Dr. Darbyshire is well qualified to discuss the services of his department as well as the general psychology of the deaf.

Parents who have children with hearing impairments, may have questions regarding the testing and evaluation their child's hearing. There may also be questions involving an explanation of audiograms and the choice of hearing aids. Children of preschool age often benefit from help given by home visiting teachers, from the Audiological Department at the Ontario School for the Deaf, deals with these services.

Early in the program there will be a 22-minute color film entitled "Sound Start." The Silent Drum, produced by the Lexington School for the Deaf, has been provided by the Helen Keller Foundation of the Canada Cities. The film will explain the mechanics of the hearing process, and will explore the causes of hearing loss and illustrate five different types of hearing impairment.

This meeting is open to all who are interested.

Shut Down Plant Pays for Pollution

Canada Cement La Farge Ltd. was fined $200 in provincial court here yesterday for violation of regulations of the Environmental Protection Act last Oct. 31.

An inspector from the provincial ministry of the environment was toured the company's demolition site at Point Anne last Oct. 31 when he observed company employees tending a rubbish fire. The fire was being used to consume waste materials from a demolition project.

The provincial inspector observed the smoke being emitted from the fire for a period of 30 minutes before deciding the emissions exceeded the guidelines laid down by the ministry for safeguarding the environment.

On a smoke emission scale used by ministry officials, the Canada Cement rubbish fire had a density rating of three.

A company representative told the court that the offence was the first in the company's history and was not directly related to the production of cement.

He also said there had been no physical damage done to the homes or property in the area surrounding the rubbish fire.

The maximum fine for a conviction under the relevant section of the Environmental Protection Act is $5,000.

Belleville firefighters responded to the following call for assistance during the 24 hour period ending Wednesday at 8 a.m.

Deseronto Man Jailed

Deseronto man, Joseph Glen Allison, 23, convicted of break, enter and theft and failure to appear for a trial, was sentenced to two years less a day in a provincial reformatory yesterday, when he appeared in provincial court here.

Allison was arrested by Deseronto police January 18, after he had broken into a store at 283 Edmund Street in Deseronto.

When the police went to the Edmund Street home, they found that someone had smashed a window in the second floor of the building.

A neighbor told the police that he had seen Allison running away from the building shortly before they arrived.

Allison confessed to participating in the break-in after he was arrested and told police where they could find 26 eight track tapes that had been taken from the house. The tapes were valued at approximately $185.

At the time of his arrest, Allison was serving a three year suspended sentence for a previous, Oct. 18, 1973, conviction.

North Stars Still in There

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Minnesota North Stars' slim chances of gaining a playoff berth in the West Division of the National Hockey League were slightly enhanced Tuesday night when they defeated the third-place Los Angeles Kings 5-1.

Minnesota is now five points behind Atlanta Flames, who were idle, with only six games remaining in the schedule. The Kings need a victory to clinch a playoff spot.

Danny Grant and J. P. Parise were the chief architects of the North Stars victory, each scoring two goals. The loss was the first in 12 games for the Kings, who got their only goal from Bob Berry during a power play.

"Stranger things have happened before in this game," Stars' right winger Bill Goldsworthy said of his team's chance of making the playoffs.

"We don't consider ourselves out of it yet, and we're loose— we don't have a thing to lose," Parise agreed. "We're going to fight it down to the end. Maybe we'll surprise somebody."

Montreal 4 at Vancouver 3

Yvan Cournoyer scored his second goal of the game and 29th of the season with 2:51 remaining to pace the Canadiens to victory that lifted them into a four-point edge over the third-place New York Rangers in the East Division. However, the Rangers have a game in hand.

The Montreal defence held the Canucks to only 12 shots on goalie Wayne Thomas—three in the first period, five in the second and four in the third.

Meanwhile, in Buffalo, the Sabres saw their chances for a playoff spot weakened when their top goaltender, Dave Dryden, informed the club that he would miss tonight's game against the Red Wings and possibly their home game Thursday against the Black Hawks. Dryden's father-in-law was killed in an automobile accident in Hunterville, Ont., on the weekend.

The Sabres are eight points behind the fourth-place Toronto Maple Leafs in the East Division and each teams has six games remaining.

Blues Force Final Game

By MIKE BRADSHAW
Sports Staff

For the second consecutive year the Belleville Bobcats will have to try to take the Metro Junior B Championship on the opposition's home ice.

Tuesday night at the Memorial Arena the Cats dropped a 6-4 decision to the visiting Bramalea Blues and through the loss watched the Junior B Championship come down to the final game.

"We really had our backs to the wall," said Bramalea coach, Rick Hay, "they had us at a real disadvantage, but now we've got the advantage going home for the seventh game."

Previous to Tuesday's defeat, the Bobcats had not lost in a game at home in their last 17. For that matter they had only lost one in 20 starts at home.

"We were aware of their home record," said Hay, "but we were also aware of the fact that if we didn't break their home record we were all done playing hockey for the season. These guys just went out there and played hockey until the 60 minutes was up. They never quit trying."

The Bobcats did some excellent forechecking in the first period but the result of which was a 3-0 lead.

Grant Gongan, promoted from the juvenile ranks near the end of the season, put together an all out attack throughout the game. A splendid job of coming back to help protect the Bobcats' goal.

Defensive Rick Hall got consistent efforts from all four members of their first line corps although; the defensemen weren't exactly playing up to par.

"Belleville couldn't be faulted for losing, said coach Hay, "it was a good game and could very easily have gone either way."

The turning point in the contest appeared to be in the second period when the Bobcats rattled three consecutive shots off the Blues' goalpost.

Bramalea goalie Barrie Oakes, who has had a lot of good fortune during the series, couldn't have asked for more since he was beaten on all three shots.

Belleville was in complete control of the first period and took a 1-0 lead on Vern Arney's goal at 5:38.

The only other goal of the period went to Grant Gongan.

Bramalea came out hungry in the second and tied the game up at 3-3 before the Cats got mobbe.

Doug Crawford and Bob Dugan were the Blues' marksmen.

The Bobcats went ahead 3-2 on Gongan's second tally of the game, but Bramalea came back with less than a minute left in the middle frame and tied the score again.

Ted Bonham scored the Blues third goal.

Bramalea jumped into a 4-3 lead at 2:41 of the final period on a Bill Joyce goal.

Belleville will have their work cut out for them tonight in Bramalea when they try to defeat the Blues for the second straight game on home ice. Bramalea has only been beaten at home four times this season. Game time is 8:15 at the Victoria Park Arena.

Despite like this one by Belleville Bobcats' Mark Coates, making a last ditch effort to put the puck into the net before heading to behind the net, the Cats could not come up with the goals to capture the Metro Jr. B championship at home last night. Bramalea's Barry Oakes makes the stop on Coates, while Grant Gongan of the Cats looks on.

Rollins Peewees Set For Shrine Tourney

By MIKE BRADSHAW
Sports Staff

With only three days left until the official opening of the Belleville Peewee Shrine Tournament, participating teams are raring to get into action.

The city will be represented by Rollins peewee all-stars and team manager, Gord Miller says Rollins will "hold their own" amid the top-notch competition.

Belleville's peewees have already made their mark in tournament play this season. They won the Grand Championship at the Trenton Peewee tournament, they were the the 'A' and Grand Champions of the Orillia tournament and at Sault Ste. Marie they finished runners up to the Grand Champions.

"We were slow getting started this season," said Miller, "but now our defence is strong and our forwards backchecking."

"Offensively," added Miller, "we're particularly strong up the middle. Our centers, Clarence Brookman, Kevin Meagher and Mark Crawford, are really producing for us."

Over the weekend Clarence picked up a goal and six assists in two games.

The same two games Crawford had five goals and two assists.

The locals' goaltending has been excellent in the three tournament starts, recording a goals against average of less than 1.25. Don Cook and Bobby Hedge handle the goaltending.

"That's really going to make us tough," speculated Miller, "is the fact that we have great team spirit and the guys are fired up about winning the tournament."

During the regular season, Belleville had a 4-2 decision with Peterborough Treetway's.

The Peterborough squad will be just one of the 16 teams that will be in attendance in the Shrine Tournament.

Peterborough finished first in the OMHA Lakeshore AAA League with a 13-5-1 won-lost-tied record. The Lakeshore League is the same one as Belleville is in.

The Treetway team was beaten out of the OMHA peewee finals by Burlington last one week ago.

"We're a small team," stated manager Jim Hargreaves, "so we have to play a strong defensive game and wait for the breaks. Any one of our three lines are capable of scoring for us, but what we have going for us is a strong team effort. Our boys don't even know who the top scorer on the team is and they don't care because with us individuals don't count."

Peterborough has proven they can do well at tournaments by their finish in the 'A' finals of the famed Quebec International. There, they outscored their opposition by 11 in six games.

Their best finish in the Shrine tournament in recent years was 'B' runner-up in 1972.

Nepean Raiders, of Ottawa, will be a strong competitor for the Shrine Championship and are hoping to break out of a tournament jinx in Belleville.

Raiders have been beaten out in the Championship game of five tournaments this year.

"We're a defensive team," said manager Doug Eyfe, "we hold the opposition to as few goals as possible."

Scott Thompson is their top tournament performer being named to all-star teams at the Port Huron International Silver Stick Tournament and the Rhode Island Tournament.

Orillia will be looking for another berth in the Shrine Grand Championship game. In 1972 Orillia won the 'B' Championship, but had to settle for second best in the Tournament as they were beaten by Toronto Blues in the finals.

"We play as a team all the time," said Knox, "but like any other team we have our stars. What really keeps the guys going though is Larry."

Larry is Orillia's number one goalie and captured the spot on the team despite the fact that he suffers from cystic fibrosis.

"Larry is so full of determination that he just picks the rest of them up and bonds them together," added Knox.

Orillia finished second in the York Simcoe League with 31 wins, two ties and 13 losses.

Flyers Come Up Big

AURORA (Special) — They're sponsored by Middleton Park Community Council. The name they go under is Trenton Major Atom Flyers. Jim Whyte is the coach and Dennis Smith, manager.

But on the weekend here in the Little NHL Tournament, they were just a gritty group of youngsters who looked defeat in the eye, decided they wanted none of that, and proceeded to capture a Division and grand championship honors in their section.

Trenton was just 10 seconds away from defeat in the grand championship match with Ottawa South when Mike Nadjiwan's goal forced overtime. It wasn't until the second overtime period that David Ferguson teamed up with Dale Hawerchuk to count the goal which made the Flyers champions.

Coach Whyte had goalie Glen Cherrett out in favor of an extra attacker when Nadjiwan clicked for his equalizer after taking a pass from Steve Weise, while Ottawa fans began the countdown.

Ottawa South bounced back to take the lead on counters by John Jenkins and Pierre Nesbry and until the late Trenton strategy turned the tables, it appeared Nesbry's goal would be the winner.

Cherrett supplied Flyers with stout goaltending in the A final as the Trenton team scored a 2-0 win over Newmarket. Steve Weston and Jim Turner were the marksmen with assists for Mark Acton, Whyte, Danny McDonald and Smith. Cherrett's effort earned him star of the game honors.

Steve Smith's unassisted goal with 4:56 remaining in regulation time carried Flyers to victory over Aurora in semi-final play. The Trenton defenceman was named the game's top player.

Danny McDonald had opened the scoring for Trenton in the first period on a neat combination play with Mark Beale and Turner assisting. Aurora's Donald Doyle equalized early in the second to set the stage for Smith's game winner.

Ottawa West had wiped out an early 2-0 Trenton lead built in the first period on goals by Smith and Hawes, by connecting for the second frame's only counters off the sticks of Jeff Curtis and Dave Seymour.

Boston Releases Aparicio, Cepeda Dodgers Cut Agee

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Luis Aparicio wasn't mad while Orlando Cepeda was stunned, but neither was a member of Boston Red Sox today.

The two veterans were unconditionally released by the Red Sox Tuesday. So were their combined $300,000 salaries.

"I'm not mad at anybody," said Aparicio, who'll be 38 next month and has played more games—2,386—than any shortstop in major league history.

"This was something that had to come sooner or later. I've been suspecting something would happen."

"Somebody told me not to trust Johnson because he was two-faced. I told him I know he didn't want me right along and he kept saying that I was wrong."

Despite gimpy knees that prevented him from playing in the field, Cepeda hit .289 with 20 home runs and 64 runs batted in last year as the Red Sox' designated hitter. He has 379 lifetime homers.

In announcing the cuts, Johnson said:

"I've decided to go with our two young shortstops, Rick Burleson and Mario Guerrero. It's tough for a first-year manager to cut a Hall of Famer and a Luis. I hope he can catch on with another club."

Aparicio, having been a manager himself in the Venezuelan winter league, agreed with Johnson's decision.

"I'd do the same thing," he said. "I'd go with the kids. I know they can do the job. I'm going home. I'm not going to call anybody. They know where I am."

Aparicio batted .272 in 132 games last season.

Another famous baseball name was released when the Los Angeles Dodgers dropped outfielder Tommie Agee, 31, a World Series hero in 1969 with New York Mets. Agee was obtained from St. Louis in an offseason trade that sent pitcher Pete Richert to the Cardinals. He had three hits in 20 at-bats this spring.

Juan Beniquez doubled across two tying runs in the ninth inning and then scored the winner on Bob Montgomery's single, lifting Boston to an 8-7 victory over Kansas City Royals.

The Royals also lost a pitcher when Helen Brites went on the disabled list with a sore knee.

Los Angeles pounded Baltimore's Rass Grimsley for six runs in the fourth inning on Jim Wynn's homer, Bill Russell's double and Dave Lopes' double and defeated the Orioles 8-5 for their 10th consecutive exhibition victory.

Al Santorini, Aurelio Monteagudo and Mike Wallace limited Oakland York Athletics to seven hits in pitching Philadelphia Phillies to a 4-1 triumph.

Angel Mangual's run-scoring double in the 10th inning enabled Oakland York Athletics to defeat Chicago Cubs 6-7. The victory by Andy Thornton and his game into extra innings with a two-run homer in the ninth.

A two-run homer by Willie McCovey and a solo shot by Leron Lee powered San Diego Padres to a 4-1 victory over Milwaukee Brewers. Another pair of Brewers was shut out for seven innings by Tom Bradley and Ken Sanders 4-3 by San Francisco Giants.

Al Kaline and Ed Brinkman drove in two runs apiece as Detroit Tigers blanked Pittsburgh Pirates 5-0 and Tom Griffin allowed four hits in seven innings and pitched the Houston Astros past Montreal 5-1. The Expos' eighth straight setback.

Lee Stanton's single drove in the winning run as California Angels beat Cleveland Indians 4-3 in 11 innings.

Atlanta's Carl Morton and New York's Pat Dobson each hurled seven scoreless frames as the Braves and Yankees struggled to 0-0 tie in a game Pete Richert to the Cardinals. He had three hits in 20 at-bats this spring.

Shulman Says Gambler Slipped Past Police

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. Morton Shulman (NDP—Toronto High Park) charged Tuesday the legislature that provincial police officers let a top United States criminal slip through their hands despite a tip from American police.

He said provincial police raided a stag party in Burlington last week and seized "one Louis Tavano, whose sins as the head of organized crime were related here in the legislature on November 8, 1970."

Dr. Shulman said that Tavano received hundreds of millions of dollars they would be laid. However, he said the police had no reason to lay a charge against the man.

RUSBAND BEATEN

LONDON (CP) — A wife was ordered by the divorce court here to stop beating her husband. The court was told how Sylvia Gadsby first locked her engineer husband Arthur out in the rain and then kicked him unconscious. But the judge, while ordering Sylvia not to molest her husband, refused Gadsby's plea to have her banned from their home. "He's a grown man, isn't he?", remarked the judge.

Kerr Agrees That Police Should Disclose Records

TORONTO (CP) — Solicitor-General John Rios of Hamilton who a general Georges Kerr agreed company would not bond be Tuesday that police should cause of an apparent criminal make disclosure of criminal record when they are asked for them by those concerned.

He also agreed in the legislature with suggestions from Albert Roy (L—Ottawa East) that prints and photographs taken subsequent to an indictable offence should be destroyed after the charge is dismissed against the individual.

Mr. Roy referred to the case of a "layoff bets" from Ontario. A layoff bet occurs when a bookmaker lacks the financial resources to handle a large bet and spreads the money elsewhere.

"Why when you had him in your hands did you let him go?" asked Dr. Shulman.

He charged that provincial police had evidence to prove that Tavano had been receiving all the layoff bets from Ontario.

Solicitor-General George Kerr said Tavano was well known to the provincial police and there was any reason to lay victims of that kind." Mr. Kerr said. "It is possible that civil charges could be laid in a case like that."

BOARD MEMBER CHOSEN

QUEBEC (CP) — Mrs. Marcel Thivierge will be a member on the board of the Franco-Belgian International Chemical and Cosmetics Co. which plans to start the construction of a factory in nearby St. Augustin, industrial park within a month. Mrs. Thivierge said the company makes 37 different products in the field of cosmetics. The factory, scheduled to start operations in September, will employ about 35 women.

Arbitration Is Shunned

OTTAWA (CP) — Shipping companies and the Seafarers International Union (SIU) would not agree to voluntary arbitration of their contract dispute, Labor Minister John Munro said Tuesday in the Commons.

The SIU case is different from others in which voluntary arbitration has been successful, Mr. Munro said. The SIU contract has expired, a strike has begun "and I doubt if they'd go back to work subject to arbitration."

MEMO FROM HELEN GAGEN, CONSUMER ADVISOR, MIRACLE FOOD MART
USING THE FREEZER ECONOMICALLY

Does a home freezer really save money? Some people question it — but those who use freezers efficiently are sure to conserve time, and may cut food bills. Here are some hints:
*Keep quantities small down by placing the freezer in a dry, well ventilated place, away from sunlight or similar heat.
*Freeze fruits and vegetables at peak quality and lowest price. Unless you grow your own, don't fill the freezer with "storable" fruits and vegetables such as turnips, squash and apples.
*Remember that unless you use your freezer at near-capacity, with constant turnover, operating costs eat up savings. Recommended turnover is 2½ times a year.
*To preserve quality, keep freezer at zero F. to 10 degrees below.
*When there are notably good buys in favorite meats, fresh or frozen fruits and vegetables, stock your freezer. Just be sure all will be used in a reasonable time.
*Organize removal of foods from the freezer, to avoid too frequent opening and closing.
*Save on bread by baking 6 loaves at a time and freezing 4.
*Use wrap carefully — it's part of freezing cost.
*Be sure to label and rotate foods for top quality.
*Make leftovers into sandwiches or one-serving meals and freeze, rather than risk spoilage through forgetting them in the refrigerator.

WHEN TO REFRIGERATE MEAT
Refrigeration is safe for short-term storage only! If you plan on using the meat within 2 to 3 days of purchase, preserve its freshness and flavor by storing, loosely wrapped, in the coldest part of your refrigerator (usually the bottom shelf) or unwrapped in the special meat compartment. Do not wash meat to avoid increasing the possibility of spoilage.

Commons Pays Homage to Dief

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons paid tribute Tuesday to John Diefenbaker, marking the 34th anniversary of the former prime minister's first election to Parliament.

Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield said Mr. Diefenbaker's career in Parliament represented a "tremendous service to this country."

All-party applause followed and often interrupted tributes from spokesmen for each of the four parties. The Prince Albert MP was prime minister from 1957 to 1963.

Mr. Stanfield said Mr. Diefenbaker continues to be "a vigorous, eloquent and effective champion of the rights of Canadians and of the rights of the underdog."

As the longest-sitting member in Parliament, Mr. Diefenbaker, 78, was dean of the House and an example to all other members.

Stanley Knowles, NDP House leader and second-longest sitting member, recalled the day Mr. Diefenbaker was first elected to the Commons—March 26, 1940.

"I was defeated that day," Mr. Knowles said.

Mr. Diefenbaker had been a great defender of civil liberties and fundamental human rights.

Mr. Diefenbaker had not been well understood in Quebec and had not understood Quebec well, but Quebeckers recognize the former prime minister as one of the greatest politicians in Canada.

Allan MacEachen, government House leader and the Liberal member with the longest service in the Commons, spoke of the "esteem with which he (Mr. Diefenbaker) is held on this side of the House."

Trudeau Again Disavows Goyer's Oil Sands Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau reiterated Tuesday that the government has no plans for a $30-billion project to develop the vast northern Alberta oil sands.

Fielding a series of opposition questions in the Commons, he said Supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer has been giving his personal views in speeches favoring a massive oil sands development plan.

Mr. Goyer was not outlining government policy, he told Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield. Energy policies were set out by himself and Energy Minister Donald Macdonald.

Mr. Stanfield said Mr. Macdonald has indicated that a cabinet decision has been made on how the oil sands should be developed. Mr. Goyer had indicated that the question was still open.

Mr. Trudeau said he appreciated Mr. Stanfield's interest but wanted to "assure the nervous members opposite that things are going OK in cabinet."

He said he has authorized Mr. Goyer to look into the project on his own and the minister may continue to make speeches. Policy decisions would be outlined by Mr. Macdonald, however.

Exile Is Old Story For Rebel Russians

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Now that dissident author Solzhenitsyn has been expelled from the Soviet Union and stripped of his citizenship, one question is how much influence he will have on the country he left behind.

Solzhenitsyn has joined the band of Russian emigres, ranging from descendants of the imperial Romanov family to left-wing politicians, which has provided the West with an adopted tribe that includes artists, scientists and writers of world fame.

After the outstanding 19th-century Russian thinker Alexander Herzen went into voluntary exile in England, Czar Alexander II became a regular reader of his radical publication, The Bell.

Solzhenitsyn, shortly before his arrest and expulsion, said members of the central committee of the Soviet Communist party were secretly and avidly reading his labor camp history, Gulag Archipelago.

Both under the czars and under the Communist system, there has been a tendency to depict Russian exiles as inevitably going to seed as soon as they lose touch with their homeland.

One of the favorite examples in the last century was novelist Ivan Turgenev, whose last few lines were written in a mixture of Russian, French and Italian.

However absence from Russia might have affected Turgenev's creativity, the return of his body to St. Petersburg in 1883—when Fyodor Dostoyevsky described the anguish of the Russian intelligentsia at a famous railroad station speech—was a major political event.

In April, 1917, a sealed train pulled into Petrograd returning another Russian exile, alive and well, who was to change the face of his homeland. It was Vladimir Lenin.

The revolution itself was made outside Russia, in the havens of Britain, Germany, Switzerland and Italy where generations of Russian radicals plotted the overthrow of the czars.

The political influence of Leon Trotsky—exiled in 1929—was generally thought to be on the decline after his banishment but in 1940 he was assassinated in Mexico apparently on the orders of Josef Stalin.

Solzhenitsyn's influence on the Soviet Union, where his works are banned, can no longer be direct. It is through world reaction to the Kremlin's moves against him that his weight is most likely to be felt.

When Yevgeny Zamyatin, author of We, a chilling vision of a future totalitarian state, wrote to Stalin in 1931 asking to leave, he said: "I beg that I be allowed to go abroad for some time so that I may come home as soon as it is possible . . . to express devotion to great ideas without crawling before small men."

He was allowed out with his wife and died six years later in Paris.

In more recent times, a prominent writer sent out, and later divorced of his citizenship was Valeri Tarsis, who went to Britain in 1965.

Whereas Solzhenitsyn was first stripped of his citizenship and then deported as an alien, geneticist Zhores Medvedev was deprived of his citizenship while on a lecture trip to Britain last year.

A similar thing happened to Valeri Chalidze, a young physicist who left the Soviet Union in 1972. A former member of the unofficial Soviet Human Rights Committee, he now publishes The Chronicle of Human Rights in the U.S.S.R. in New York.

One of the most famous cases in the history of Soviet dissent, literary critic Andrei Sinyavsky, now lives in Paris after leaving the Soviet Union last August, but retains his Soviet passport.

BEAVER handyman tip No. 24 Clip & Save In a series

This is the 3rd tip in a series on panelling. Read them all!

1. On an already finished or plastered wall you must locate the studs in order to put up panelling.
2. You could probe with a nail or drill but there is an easier method.
3. Buy an inexpensive 'stud finder' from your local Beaver store.
4. The distance from the centre of each stud to the next is 16".
5. After locating a stud, measure off and mark the remaining studs with a chalk line from top to bottom.
6. Make sure that the lines are straight by hanging a weighted string or plumb line from the edge of the ceiling to the floor.
7. Remember that studs are not always evenly spaced, so check at intervals with the stud finder to make sure you don't miss a stud as you panel.

PENISTONE, England (CP) — Yorkshire housewife Doris Robinson was furious when a gang of stone-cleaners scrubbed her home clean in mistake for another house. Tommy Banks Is Busy Man With Varied Work Program

EDMONTON (CP) — When Tommy Banks finishes one of his 18-hour days of recording sessions, meetings, telephone calls and everything else it takes to run his businesses, he doesn't look as polished as he does on television.

He looks tired, the pock marks and lines in his face look deep and his hair is dishevelled. But his voice is vibrant with the excitement of doing what he wants o do.

Currently that includes conducting his band, conducting other orchestras in Edmonton and elsewhere, operating his recording studio, doing his television show, writing music, publishing music and producing a television show for the eastern market.

"What the hell do I need an avocation for" he asked.

"What I do is so diverse — they're all avocations."

The show for eastern viewers is a panel-game show with Judy LaMarsh and publisher Jack McClelland, taped on the Global network. The Tommy Banks show, now seen on CBC, will soon be produced in an independent Edmonton television station and will be sold next fall as a one-hour, five-cable-a-week package to television stations across the country.

The recording audio goes under the name of Century II and accommodates musicians, including Tommy Banks, for everything from cutting records to making commercials.

"I'm not rich, I owe a fortune," he said, even though he admits to making upwards of $30,000 a year.

The money gets socked back into the recording studio, which won't pay off immediately but keeps him doing what he wants to do, although it means driving a car he bought second-hand in 1966.

"If I had any spare time I would be doing more of what I'm doing," he said.

Born in Calgary 37 years ago, Tommy Banks was the son of once theatrical parents. He started play the piano at age when he was five. By 14, he had left high school in Edmonton to play in a touring jazz band.

"I wasn't learning anything that did me any good . . . I knew by then what I wanted to do — something to do with entertainment and communications and anything to do with music.

What he considers his first real break came through the Orion Musical Revue in Edmonton where from 1953 to 1959 he worked as the musical director of a 25-piece orchestra and a stage cast of 60. The experience of having that kind of organization to learn on was invaluable.

"That kind of musical theatre is my real love; that's my absolute love. I had it bad, when I was 18. the opportunity to realize everything that I ever wanted because all that time the theatre bed everything to it. It had musicians, it had the audience, the music and the resources of people to do whatever you wanted to do.

At times he worked in an office, wrote advertisements and worked as a staff announcer for the CBC. In 1966 he decided he didn't want to work at anything but music and entertainment and he didn't want to work for anyone but himself. So he set his show band and started on the club circuit.

His second bit of luck came when he brought his band to an Edmonton club called the Peddock where he found himself backing for Jimmy Rogers, the Ames Brothers, Bob Hope and others of the same calibre.

He joined the CBC in 1962 and about 1967, he began acting as host for a talk-variety show called On the Town.

Three years later the show had grown into an hour format and was being broadcast nationally.

About the same time he decided to go into music publishing, producing radio and television commercials on a part-time basis. By 1965 he acquired his full-sized studio.

Tommy Banks the man and Tommy Banks the celebrity are difficult to separate because he is so wrapped up in his work but he does have a personal side.

Married, with three children, he says he likes to read, especially historical fiction and non-fiction.

"I'm a bad reader . . . I savor reading. I'll read a page and I'll very often put a book down after a couple of paragraphs again that I hate. I'm too particularly fussy. I really admire writers."

He also considers himself old-fashioned.

"I'm an insanely conservative person. I'm an anachronism in fact in terms of my outlook."

His conservatism, he said, covers politics, economics and morality but not religion.

"I'm not religious at all, I'm agnostic. My wife is an atheist and we can't figure out what religion not to force the kids up in.

"I don't think morals have anything to do with religion. Moral means that you don't hit a guy when he's down."

Rockies Show's Stars

The majestic peaks of the Canadian Rocky Mountains and nature's abundant wildlife which they shelter are the subject of the final program in the National Film Board series, West, to be seen on the CBC-TV network on April 18, at 10 p.m. The program, entitled "Temples of Time", is devoted to the visual grandeur which makes the Rocky Mountains throughout the changing seasons.

Directed by William Canning and filmed by Tony Iannello, the film features an original music score played on the Moog synthesizer.

The great mountains are seen as time capsules of creation the fossils embedded in their peaks were once on the seabed of the Pacific ocean. Their rugged appearance conceals an incredibly delicate stratification of plant and wildlife which can readily be toppled by man.

"Temples of Time" reveals the splendore of the Rockies in all seasons and the deceptively fragile balance of all living things which they sustain.

MELBOURNE (Reuter) — About 350 girls were treated for minor injuries and hysteria when American pop star David Cassidy appeared at the Melbourne Cricket Ground Sunday night.

Many of the girls were pressed against steel crash barriers when screaming fans surged towards the stage. A few fainted in the crush.

Girls who fainted were passed over the heads of the crowd to first aid posts.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Ed Platt, who played the Chief on the Get Smart! television series, died Tuesday of a heart attack in his apartment.

The body was found Wednesday by the apartment manager, who summoned police. Officers said Platt, 58, apparently died Tuesday of natural causes.

Platt, a native of Staten Island, N.Y., sang with the Paul Whiteman band for two years before becoming an actor.

SANTIAGO (Reuter) — Chilean stage comedian Hugo Goodman has shot dead himself. He died Wednesday when he ignored an order to halt during curfew in Concepcion, one of here, the military government said.

The government was giving a series of performances in various Chilean towns and was shot as he drove through Concepcion an hour and a half after the curfew began.

A government spokesman said his death was very regrettable because he was a man who shared the ideas of the Junta."

Ballet for All Proves Popular

TORONTO (CP) — Peter Brinson, the creator and president and head of the Royal Ballet's highly successful "Ballet for All" tours, is a busy man.

Mr. Brinson, in Toronto recently for a two-week lecture stint at York University, is also director of the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation for Britain and the Commonwealth—one of the most innovative philanthropic organizations in the world.

This summer, he will be in Banff, Alta., at the Banff School of Fine Arts.

The Gulbenkian Foundation, with headquarters in Lisbon, is built on part of the huge fortune amassed by Gulbenkian, an Armenian entrepreneur who was the first to tap the enormous oil potential in the Middle East. The foundation confidently nearly $17 million a year around the world, with half the money going to the arts and the rest to scientific and educational endeavors.

Mr. Brinson's London office is the only foundation operation outside Portugal, and has built up a significant reputation for assisting ballet.

"We are a Commonwealth office and, by and large, can't seem to find anyone in Canada who wants our money," Mr. Brinson said in an interview. "It all seems very mysterious.

"We send out leaflets and brochures every year, but we get a very meagre response. Are the performing arts that well endowed in Canada?"

The question was facetious because he knows the arts in Canada have troubles of financial problems. That is why he is mystified at the lack of response, he said.

Mr. Brinson, author of several books on dance, started the Ballet For All series in 1962. Its format is simple. Two actors present a lecture, explaining what is going on among the dancers on stage.

He said the program quickly became popular in Britain and now is performed before 100,000 people a year all over Britain and televised in a somewhat modified format.

"There is a possibility—I must stress that it's nothing more than a good possibility at the moment—that the Royal Ballet will send the little company to tour Canada next year," Mr. Brinson said. "It would be an experiment.

"If it worked then a Canadian equivalent might be created. If I have anything to do with it, though, I shall insist that the best of this country's young dancers be used and not the element that would mean they'll have to come from the National Ballet. I find the potential of that company very exciting right now."

Bee Gees Retain Faithful Fans

TORONTO (CP) — It's been more than a year now since the Bee Gees have put a hit song on radio's pop charts. The group has suffered a major breakup, change of personnel and the ever-present threat of being overshadowed by other spectacular bands.

Yet since the Bee Gees first grabbed the attention of the international music scene in 1967, they've weathered every storm, managed to hang on to their faithful following and retract new fans and maintain that light, melodic sound which makes the British pop group unique.

For Barry Gibb and his younger twin brothers Robin and Maurice, success as pop musicians was gleaned from years of performing and developing a style together in front of audiences.

Long before the Beatles heralded a new era for explosive, long-haired groups, the Gibb brothers were blending their young voices on a weekly television show in Australia, where they had emigrated from Manchester with their parents in the late 1950s.

Back in London nearly 10 years later, the Bee Gees established themselves with New York Mining Disaster, followed by about nine other solid hits, all of which carried their characteristic sound, backed by full orchestral accompaniment.

But with quick success came a crisis within the group. Guitarist Vince Melouney and drummer Colin Peterson left the band; they had barely been noticed by a public overwhelmed by the writing-vocal talents of the Gibbs.

Then the Gibb brothers suffered a harsh blow when Odessa, their lavish and beautiful two-record album, went unnoticed by the music industry, overshadowed by new releases from the Beales and Blood, Sweat and Tears.

Odessa had not been promoted extensively.

Finally, a buildup of personality conflicts resulted in the brothers themselves choosing separate paths as soloists.

Their 18-month split, however, proved beneficial for Barry, Robin and Maurice. With the end of that hiatus, the brothers were ripe for action as a team, the rifts had healed and their international following was almost intoxicated with anticipation of the new Bee Gees release.

Lonely Days, in 1970, brought them back to the top in a burst of melodic energy. The group now does not come on with a big impact. Unlike many top bands today, they do not churn out record after record. Their last smash hit, How to Mo, was released more than a year ago.

The Gibbs' attitude toward their music is anything but passive. They prefer to hold back their product, develop its sound to the fullest, and only then is it released.

Their style is not run-of-the-mill rock. In fact, it can be argued whether the Bee Gees can even be classified as a rock band.

Their recent concerts at Montreal, Hamilton and Toronto—their first Canadian tour within a year—demonstrated that the Bee Gees still have an eager following. All shows were near sell-out performances.

The Bee Gees now are completing work on their 10th album, scheduled for release in April, in New York.

Your Horoscope

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Thursday, March 28

Aries (March 21-April 19) Important information you get today should not be trusted to memory. Make notes. You'll need these facts in the future.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) Be sure to keep accurate records of financial transactions at this time. Get warranties and guarantees in writing.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) Be careful in dealing with partners; you don't know the world. Don't be afraid to question. Be alert for evasive answers.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) Today you'll tell the truth to the wrong person. Be sure those with whom you share confidences can keep secrets.

Leo (July 23-Aug 22) A friend is involved in a sticky situation. If you're not careful, you'll be drawn into it. Avoid the conspirator.

Virgo (Aug 23-Sept 22) If you make commitments for expediency's sake, without thinking things through, you'll later find yourself in a mess.

Libra (Sept 23-Oct 23) Your thinking isn't as sound today as it usually is. Mistakes are likely to crop up. Pay close attention to what you're doing.

Scorpio (Oct 24-Nov 22) Most of your thoughts will be focused on finances. That doesn't mean you'll manage matters as wisely as you should.

Sagittarius (Nov 23-Dec 21) You will be very indecisive. This will lead to complications in your affairs and the affairs of others as well.

Capricorn (Dec 22-Jan 19) Although you'll have many irons in the fire today you won't stick with one thing long enough to produce a desired result.

Aquarius (Jan 20-Feb 19) You'd be wise to cancel your shopping spree for today. You're likely to spend far more than your budget can handle.

Pisces (Feb 20-March 20) You're very impatient to get a matter of importance concluded. Slow down—move too impetuously and you'll be sorry later.

Delay Costs More Than New X-ray

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Why do doctors insist on x-rays when entering a hospital if pictures are available and at their disposal at the same area of the body? Some simply state that this is necessary and routine.

Duplication of x-rays not only seems unnecessary and dangerous to me, but I have taken pictures of previous x-rays with me but am asked to have more x-rays. — M.C.

I realize that this practice causes and sometimes irritates patients, and it may well be that from time to time such x-rays are taken when they could be avoided and contribute nothing to the patient's welfare.

But the same, there are good reasons why this has been pretty generally accepted as routine procedure.

For one thing, previous x-rays ordinarily are filed somewhere else—in another hospital, in a radiologist's office, or wherever. It takes time to get the necessary permission, and to have the x-rays delivered to the hospital. Considering today's hospitalization rate, the cost of an extra x-ray is trifling compared to the expense of keeping the patient in the hospital for even an additional day or more.

And, of course, in some instances the need for the x-rays immediately may be urgent from the standpoint of the patient's well-being.

Then there is the x-ray that is taken at many hospitals as a routine matter as a new patient is bringing disease into the hospital. The prime example of this is the chest x-ray to detect tuberculosis.

Further, there is the question of whether any changes have occurred since the previous x-ray was taken. It may be helpful to know if the situation was six months, or three years, or even a couple of weeks ago, but it is sometimes essential that the doctor know what an x-ray shows right now.

For yet another reason, which may not be informative to you but is of significance to me, as a physician, "reading" of the x-rays is important.

As an internist, when I send a patient to x-ray I do, naturally, see the x-ray plates, but I do not ordinarily rely on my own interpretation or "reading" of them. The plates are "read" by radiologists who are specialists in interpreting what the images signify. I wait and value the opinions of these experts, and the teamwork with them is something that develops as time goes on.

Likewise they are intimately familiar with the equipment with which they are working. True, an x-ray is an x-ray, but there are differences in intensity and sharpness of the beam. Compare it, if you like, to the baseball player who wants his own pet bat in a game. A bat is a bat, but the player has come to prize his familiar bat. When a patient's well-being (Turning 109) is at stake, you want to take advantage of those added percentages.

As to danger of added x-rays, the exposure is so low as to be close to negligible, a dozen x-rays representing the equivalent of one added second of exposure. The price is outweighed by the benefits of having exactly what you need when you need it.

Here is another hand from the Culbertson-Sims match of 1930. The bidding in the first below the hand might be bid today. South merely rebids the three spades after his partner's jump rebid in hearts. North just goes to the spade game. For all he knows South may have his spades to the king and a side queen or so.

Now, South bids five clubs to show that ace. North bids five notrump. This is the grand slam force invented by Ely Culbertson shortly after the match and now a part of most experts' bidding kits. South has two of the three top spade honors and goes right to seven spades.

He wins the diamond lead with Sunny's ace; leads the three of spades to his eight; ruffs a diamond with the jack of trumps; draws trumps and claims the grand slam.

In the match the Sims family got all the way to game. Hal opened one heart and jumped rebid to three hearts. Dorothy elected to bid four clubs and when Hal rebid to four spades Dorothy passed. Culbertson pointed out that in the Culbertson system South would have responded two spades, not one and that a slam would have been reached.

It would also have been reached by almost any players anywhere in the world yet there was a good reason why Hal and Dorothy stopped in game. They accustomed to having Hal take control at times. When Hal and went from four clubs to four spades Dorothy forgot that Hal had opened the bidding and then shown great excess values by jumping all the second turn.

O. M. L. Questions And Answers

Q: Never having been to Prince Edward Island, we would like to go there this summer. Can you give us an idea of some of the points of interest and the best way of getting there from Belleville

A: Miles of smooth, sandy beaches, quaint fishing villages and green, rolling countryside give this smallest of Canadian provinces a strong appeal to vacationers. The warm waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which rise to a temperature of 70 degrees in the summer along the northern shore, provide ideal swimming conditions. Innumerable ponds and winding brooks afford excellent trout fishing, while deep-sea fishing trips may be arranged in many of the small coastal villages. Tuna fishing is becoming popular on the island's north shore.

Harness racing is the most popular spectator sport on Prince Edward Island. From June through September, races are featured several nights each week. The racing is most concentrated in Charlottetown during Old Home Week, which is held during the month of August.

Founded about 1765, Charlottetown is the capital of Prince Edward Island and the commercial and educational centre of the province. It has a fine harbor on the south shore of the Island, at the confluence of the York, East and West Rivers.

Fathers of Confederation Memorial Centre, downtown, includes a Provincial library, an art gallery and 1,000-seat theatre. Built as a national shrine to the Confederation Conference held here in 1864, the centre houses the Robert Harris collection, the largest single exhibit of works by the artist who painted the historical work, "The Fathers of Confederation." For tours; check locally for schedule. The Charlottetown Festival in July and August features special theatre presentations and gallery exhibitions; reservations are advised.

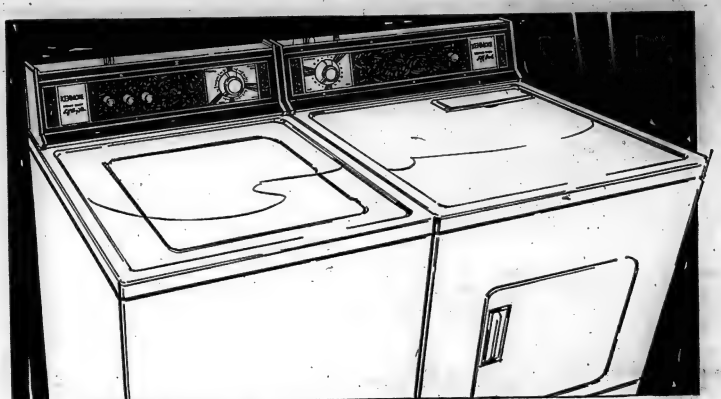
Government House, built in 1833-34, overlooks the harbor. This lovely colonial building is the residence of the lieutenant governor. Among the great personages who have been entertained here are the last four Kings of England and Queen Elizabeth II, all before their accession to the throne. King George VI and Queen Elizabeth returned as ruling sovereigns in 1939, as did Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip during their tours in 1959 and 1964.

Province House, on Queen Square, formerly known as the Colonial Building is the meeting place of the Provincial Legislature. The stone used to construct the building in 1847 was brought across the Atlantic in sailing vessels.

The Confederation Room, where delegates from various colonies met in 1864 is a national memorial containing the original furnishings. Open daily 9 to 9, July through September, tours free; rest of the year, Monday through Friday 9 to 5.

Prince Edward Island National Park, with an area of about 8 square miles, extends for 25 miles along the northern shore of the Island. It has some of the finest sand beaches in eastern Canada, backed by picturesquely eroded red sandstone headlands. Beaches supervised by surf-guards are found at Cavendish campground, Cavendish main, North Rustico, Brackley, Rustico Island, Stanhope Cape, Stanhope, Saltshope Lane and Dalvay.

A point of interest at Cavendish is Green Gables, the farmhouse immortalized in the novel Anne of Green Gables by Lucy Maude Montgomery. Open daily 10 to 6, May 15 to June 24 and September 7 to October 15; 9 to 8 rest of year. Free bilingual guide. The Green Gables Golf Course is nearby.



Summerside Acadian Museum, 5 miles west on Highway 2 in Miscouche, displays an instrument for raising hosts in an early Island church, wood dating back to 1725 from the Grand Pre dykes, and a brick from De Roma's settlement destroyed in 1745 by the English. Open Monday through Saturday 10 to noon. There is no charge for admission.

At Montague, Garden of the Gulf Museum is on Highway 4 at the south end of the Montague River bridge, the pioneer era of the island is authentically depicted.

The best route is by the Trans-Canada Highway and the ferry from Cape Tormentine, N.B., to Borden, P.E.I. An alternative return route might be north from Moncton to Campbellton, N.B., and up the Matapedia Valley to Mont Joli, P.Q., on the south shore of the St. Lawrence.

Export Tax to Pay Subsidies

Oil $6.50 a Barrel; Gasoline up 7 Cents

News Briefs

Stable Price Predicted

TORONTO (CP) — It is unlikely there will be any further sharp rises in the price of oil, the secretary-general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) said Wednesday. However, Abderrahman Khene indicated the price will increase if the industrialized countries do not learn to control inflation.

Kissinger Reports Progress

MOSCOW (AP) — Henry Kissinger ended his visit to Moscow today and reported that he and Communist party chief Leonid Brezhnev "made good progress" on a number of issues.

Indians Claim Fraud

TORONTO (CP) — A claim by the Long Lac Indian Band that it was "openly defrauded" of land that now is part of Highway 11 in northwestern Ontario is being studied by the Indian affairs department, Howard Rodlie, regional director for the department, was presented with a statement Wednesday by Chief George Finnleyson of the band located 160 miles northeast of Thunder Bay.

Owner Can Keep Houses

BROUGHAM, Ont. (CP) — Homeowners in the area of the north Pickering new town development may keep their houses if they want to, Housing Minister Sidney Handleman said Wednesday. The owner may have to move it to a new site once the townsite is prepared, but the price of the new building lot would be about the same, a square foot, as that of the lot expropriated, Mr. Handleman said. The province would bear the cost of moving the house.

Monetary System Studied

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — International experts entered today the second day of discussions on reforming the world's monetary system with an assurance from the oil-producing countries that they would not swamp currency markets with surplus oil revenues.

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau and the provincial premiers negotiated for five hours behind closed doors Wednesday and came away with an interim oil policy agreement acceptable to all.

The settlement, averting potential chaos in the petroleum industry, was highlighted by a $2.50 increase to $6.50 a barrel in the current $4 frozen price of crude oil used in Canada.

It also provides continuing petroleum subsidy payments to Eastern Canada and adoption of an indefinite export tax on crude oil sold to the United States.

The deal, scheduled to last 12 to 15 months, will mean an increase of seven to eight cents a gallon in gasoline prices west of the Ottawa Valley where virtually all markets are supplied by domestic oil.

Little or no change is expected in the rest of the country where imported crude is used to supply petroleum markets.

Prime Minister Trudeau hailed the agreement at a news conference after the meeting at his Sussex Drive residence.

"It couldn't be a better day for federalism," he told reporters.

He said the 12-to 15-month life of the agreement will give all parties time to work out a settlement on thorny energy-related issues raised during negotiations.

This raises the prospect of a better long-term deal for the western provinces on such issues as transportation, agricultural stabilization and economic development.

Mr. Trudeau declined to elaborate but said the willingness of Alberta and Saskatchewan to endorse the $6.50 domestic price is an indication that they trust Ottawa to bargain in good faith on related issues.

Crude oil is selling on international markets for more than $10.50 a barrel. Both Alberta and Saskatchewan said prior to the conference they would fight for full market value for their oil.

Their acceptance of a $6.50 price was taken as a sign that significant concessions may have been promised in other areas by Ottawa.

The agreement came just four days before the Sunday end of a voluntary national petroleum allocation plan in effect since September.

A deadlock at Wednesday's meeting might have thrown the oil industry into chaos and opened a major political and legal battle between Ottawa and the producing provinces.

Alberta produces about 85 per cent of all Canadian crude oil, Saskatchewan about 11 per cent. The rest comes largely from British Columbia and Manitoba.

Both Alberta and Saskatchewan had said they would raise prices unilaterally after the freeze if no settlement was reached. Ottawa had threatened to block them if the increase had been too high.

The right of either side to take such action has been questioned on constitutional grounds. The constitution gives the provinces control over resources but grants Ottawa power over interprovincial and international trade. Oil falls into both categories.

There appeared to be no criticism of the agreement from any of the premiers who commented after the conference. Only Frank Moores of Newfoundland, ill with the flu, did not attend. He was represented by Alex Hickman, his justice minister.

Premiers Peter Lougheed of Alberta and Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan said the settlement is acceptable and they can live with the changes it will make.

Mr. Trudeau said the agreement will equalize petroleum prices country-wide for the first

Lougheed, Blakeney Bagged Their Game

OTTAWA (CP) — In the forest of figures forming Wednesday's federal-provincial oil agreement, Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed and Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney said they bagged their quarry.

Mr. Lougheed, whose province produces about 85 per cent of domestic oil, told reporters after the first ministers' meeting that the new domestic crude oil price of $6.50 a barrel—up from $4—was his target going into the conference.

Mr. Blakeney, also hunting for a higher price, came away with the same wellhead figure and a promise from Ottawa to help build an iron and steel industry in Saskatchewan, which produces about 11 per cent of domestic production. He called that not unreasonable.

But they granted what appeared to be a significant concession: The new price will be frozen for 12 to 15 months.

Alberta and Saskatchewan also agreed to the maintenance of the federal oil export tax, which will be used to cushion consumers east of the Ottawa Valley against foreign oil prices, currently more than $10.50 a barrel.

Mr. Lougheed said $6.50 should be enough to keep oil companies interested in exploring and developing in Canada, because the price is about the same as the wellhead price in the United States.

He said he decided last January not to press his opposition to the export tax, because exports are scheduled to decline with construction of an oil pipeline to Montreal due for completion in 1976. And Ottawa had the power to levy the tax at will anyway.

He refused to say how the new revenues would be shared between the companies and his government. That would emerge when he made his statement on a new royalty policy today in the legislature.

He indicated, however, that up to 75 per cent of the increase in royalties will flow into capital investment in Alberta's oil industry.

Mr. Blakeney said Saskatchewan, which has been charging $5 a barrel at the wellhead for more than a month, stands to gain $125 million to $200 million in royalties at current production rates.

Federal aid to the iron and steel industry, and to transportation, may add another $100 million and 2,000 jobs over a number of years, he said.

Both premiers said $6.50 falls short of the real value of oil today.

But Mr. Blakeney said "there was a real feeling at least for this one-year period of adjustment not to stick it too hard to the Atlantic provinces."

Federal aid to Saskatchewan would be aimed at manufacturing and improving transportation, plants and equipment. That might include roads and railway rolling stock.

The deal was arranged at a meeting between Mr. Blakeney and Prime Minister Trudeau Tuesday and at the Wednesday conference.

NDP Opposes Compulsory Arbitration

GUELPH (CP) — Any legislation to settle contract disputes between school boards and teachers will be opposed by the New Democratic Party "as long as it contains compulsory arbitration," Stephen Lewis said Wednesday.

Mr. Lewis, provincial NDP leader, told about 1,300 local high school students and teachers that compulsory arbitration has "no place in an educational dispute."

Teachers must have the fundamental right to strike and not have it taken away.

He said he is certain teachers were not prepared to use strike action as a weapon in contract talks except as a last resort.

Hundreds Missing

60,000 Left Homeless By Flooding in Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO (Reuter) — Famine threatened areas of Brazil today in the wake of torrential rain which flooded rivers in seven states, turning towns and villages in sitempts into submerged islands.

The government-run public calamity office estimated homeless flood victims at 60,000 and a justice ministry report described the situation as "very serious".

Neither the armed forces, spearheading rescue and food supply operations, nor the government provided a death toll despite reports by radio amateurs and eyewitnesses that hundreds were swept to their death in the rising waters while others were starving on high ground.

Worst-hit was southern Santa Catarina state—where many descendents of German immigrants live. There, the city of Tubarao—population 70,000—was nearly wiped off the map by floods, according to a film shot from a plane and shown on national television Wednesday night.

According to a state government spokesman it will take five years to reconstruct the city.

A journalist who managed to reach the city claimed 1,500 people died in the floods and 60,000 residents were homeless.

A government spokesman said it was difficult to estimate the death toll with hundreds reported missing.

Union Agent Accused Of Damage at Camp

MONTREAL (CP) — A witness, whose name was ordered withheld, testified Wednesday that he saw the business agent for a union affiliated with the Quebec Federation of Labor (QFL) dismiss three generators at the LG-2 hydroelectric site in northwestern Quebec last week.

The witness told the fire commission inquiry into a fire which destroyed part of the mammoth construction site, that he saw the agent overturn three generators with a tractor.

He said he took two photographs of the agent after one of the generators was knocked down at about 12:30 p.m. last Thursday.

Shown what he identified as his own photograph by Crown prosecutor Gerard Girouard, he identified the driver as Yves Duhamel, business agent for the International Union of Operating Engineers (IUOE), Local 791.

The witness said he later saw Mr. Duhamel get into a loader parked near two tanks, one containing 20,000 gallon of diesel fuel, the other the same amount of gasoline, and puncture the two tanks.

Three or four minutes later, the witness said he saw a fire start behind the tanks.

Chamber of Commerce Wants Welfare Pared

OTTAWA (CP) — The government should cut spending, particularly for social assistance, to help curb inflation — the principal economic problem this year, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce said Wednesday.

"This would help in combatting inflation by reducing the tax burden of Canadian workers and businesses," the chamber said in a submission to the federal government.

Bernard Panet-Raymond, chairman of the chamber's executive council, said in presenting the pre-budget brief to the cabinet that "the basic objective must be to maintain the confidence of Canadian consumers and of the business community in the ability of the Canadian economy to grow at close to potential over the short-term."

The chamber made a number of tax proposals for the coming federal budget, including a request to hold the line on consumer and corporate taxes. It also urged that corporate tax reductions introduced last year should be made permanent and that provisions for a faster tax write-off of new investment in manufacturing should be extended.

Finance Minister John Turner told the chamber in February that the corporate tax measures are as "permanent as political circumstances allow."

Liberals For Workshop

TRENTON — The Prince Edward-Hastings Liberal Association met here Wednesday night to choose delegates to the party's provincial convention in Sudbury April 26-28.

Chosen were Bette Henley, Jane Cunningham, Peter Delany, Johnne Halloran and Clarence Inelis.

Martin Halloran, newly-elected president of the local association, says delegates will have a chance to preview convention discussion topics in the next week or so. It is also expected the riding association will bring some resolutions at its own to the convention.

Consumers Fight Back With Vegetable Gardens

Flowers that bloom in this so-far-back and blowy spring of '74 are blossoming in indoor greenhouses.

But fewer blooms may be seen in town and country this summer around the Quinte district.

The reason: Nagged by inflating food prices more people seem bent on raising their own vegetables this summer.

As a result, suppliers in the Belleville area report an early — and rising — demand for vegetable seeds.

"People definitely are moving toward a grow-your-own situation," says a spokesman at Thrasher Feeds in Belleville. "It's not necessarily so much a lobby as a feeling of self-satisfaction in maybe beating inflation."

Bill Bishop, president of long-established Bishop Seeds Ltd., agrees. "There's a great movement back to growing vegetable gardens. It affects the whole range of vegetable seeds. It's just simply because of the unprecedented high food prices, I think. People are going back to growing food in their gardens."

The phenomenon is not confined to city dwellers who may be plotting flower farms this spring, suppliers indicate. Farm folk also are returning to vegetable gardens, says Mr. Bishop.

"Up to this year even country people on farms were buying produce in the towns," he says. "But they seem to think it's now worthwhile to get back to keeping a big garden."

Slow may still cover the ground as winter conditions fret away at the month of March. But the demand for supplies with which to seed plots and gardens already has started.

Prompting the pressures are experiences of the past year where shortages seemed to hit the markets overnight, suppliers believe.

The demand may affect variety, but as yet no scarcity or price fluctuations seem evident, seed houses indicate.

Bill Beatty, United Co-operative of Ontario plant manager at Trenton, feels a "real great demand will develop come the spring weather. People are afraid they're going to run out."

But he believes supply will meet demand — save possibly in one area: Seed potatoes. At present the Co-op has procured 69 75-lb. bags, compared to about 180 in older years.

"There's a lot of talk that there's a shortage of garden seeds around town," said the Thrasher spokesman. "But we've had no shortages from our suppliers."

But Mr. Bishop, whose company has operated a mail-order business through Eastern Canada for almost 60 years, believes the demand may curtail the variety of seeds vegetables offered.

Mail order demand began climbing a month ago, he says.

"The demand is so much greater than normal there may not be enough to go around. Several mail-order houses now are refusing new orders," he says.

"We're still able to fill mail orders. But if it goes on at this rate we just won't have the selection. Some varieties will be impossible to obtain."

At least one greenhouse supplier in the Belleville area already is gearing growing to an expected demand.

Russ Hawkins says he is raising twice as many Spanish onion plants from seed this year. Other vegetable stocks have also been raised, lettuce, cabbage, cauliflower, peppers — "just about anything you name," says Mr. Weese.

Team Effort Advocated

There should be a team effort between the construction trades and the board of education when it comes to building schools.

This was the message members of the Quinte Construction Association were given this week by Keith Hawkins, controller of plant for the Hastings County Board of Education.

"We should have a team effort from design of schools to the finished product. The designer, the architect, the suppliers, all should be part of a team and not just one person," he said.

Mr. Hawkins pointed out that in Hastings County there was $55 million worth of plant covering about two million square feet.

Another $7 million is spent maintaining the plant and keeping it in running order, said Mr. Hawkins.

As examples of present spending he pointed out the $1.4 million extension to be built on Moira Secondary School and a new school to be built in Foxboro.

Mr. Hawkins mentioned the troubles resulting from the escalating costs of supplies and materials in the building trades.

Also mentioned was the difficulties his department has in improving and safeguarding present schools since the government imposed a ceiling on the amount of grants for education.

"Many times we have to put off til tomorrow what we need to do today. We want to have safe schools," he said. To illustrate his point, he mentioned a school that because of restricted government spending now has to combine music and gym classes in a gymnasium.

Mr. Hawkins was speaking to building trade members of the Quinte Construction Association at the Quinte Hotel.

Members Added

Three new members have been added to the Quinte Construction Association. They are Vince Bernard of Bernard Electrical and Wiring in Trenton, Derek Lawday of Moira Glass-Mirror in Corbyville and Ross Runnalls, electrical contractor in Marmora. Don Holmes of Strathwick Flooring becomes a director of the association.

Price for Oil Is Set

Energy Minister Donald Macdonald, who attended the news conference with Mr. Trudeau, said retail gasoline prices may vary slightly from province to province because of differing gasoline taxes but no wide gaps should exist otherwise.

Previously, the price gap between overseas and domestic billion" in petroleum subsidies retail differential of about eight cents a gallon between East and West.

The settlement also is expected to win general approval from companies that use oil to make products for export. Although costs will rise because of the $2.80 wellhead increase they will retain a competitive advantage over foreign companies paying the full international rate.

The federal oil export tax, adopted last October, will be retained indefinitely under the agreement.

The tax, which represents the difference between the domestic crude oil price and international rates, has been $6.40 a barrel since Feb. 1 and was scheduled to rise to $7.70 April 1.

Because of the $2.30 domestic increase, however, the tax will cover higher equalization payments. It will fall to $4.30 April 1, the date payments resulting from the $2.30 wellhead jump, he added.

Ottawa makes equalization payments annually to all provinces but the three wealthiest — Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. Higher provincial oil revenues resulting from the tax, after April 1, Pro- $2.30 boost will have the effect of raising equalization payments.

Mr. Trudeau estimated that the payments, $1.4 billion overall this year, may jump by $100 million or considerably more during the next year. Additional needed to finance "well over $1 billion will be required to because of the oil increase.

C. H. COX has graduated from the Ontario Provincial Police training and development centre in Toronto following completion of the recruit orientation course and has been posted to Downsview. Constable Cox is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Cox, now of Merlin, Ont. and is a graduate of BCI.

Fish Research: Jack Christie Explains

Record Crowds at Glenora

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

GLENORA — A record number of secondary school pupils and community adults & students were expected to tour the Lake Ontario Fisheries Research Station today and Friday.

W. J. Christie, director, cold water fish studies has estimated that approximately 1,- 800 students will tour the station to view its aquarium and study displays, during Glenora's annual open house.

The general public Wednesday was invited to attend an open house at the fisheries station operated by the ministry of natural resources.

The station began as a base for field investigation of fish and fisheries but more recently has added a program of experimental work in the laboratory. This was accompanied by the establishment of a six-acre pilot hatchery.

For work in the Bay of Quinte and other inshore areas the station uses several small outboard boats. For larger operations and open lake work two small research vessels, Namaycush and Cisco are employed.

Objective of the research station's work is described as "a search for the means of obtaining the maximum continuous harvest of useful fish from Lake Ontario."

Mr. Christie noted, "the long recognized challenge of the Lake has been its low productivity, relative to its huge volume. Added to this has been a steady decline of the quality of the fish production.

"Pollution is often a direct factor in health of fish populations. But the type of pollution which appears of greater long term concern is overfertilization of waters by our civilization. This unnatural loading of the waters with nutrients like nitrogen and phosphorous encourages nuisance growths of algae."

"Another man-created detriment to the system of equal importance has been the introduction, purposeful or otherwise, of species like alewife, smelt and white perch."

"Similarly, there have been a number of cases of overfishing which have contributed to the destabilization of the lake's fish communities."

Mr. Christie observed, "Restoring a high quality stable fishery in Lake Ontario poses an immense challenge. The state of our knowledge of aquatic ecology is such that we must learn by every curative effort and proceed cleverly and carefully toward the goal."

"The most important function of the Glenora Fisheries Station now, and for the foreseable future, is to assist with the design and evaluation of these management experiments."

He stressed that public cooperation plays a central role in many of the station's field studies.

"The reporting of tagged fish which have been recaptured by anglers and commercial fishermen is one example, is vital to our work. The capture of rare and unusual fish is also of great interest to us and we must depend heavily on fishermen in this way also."

Six Months For Theft

TRENTON — A 17-year-old Trenton youth was sentenced to six months definite in jail in provincial court here yesterday, the sequel to a $7,000 theft in mid-March.

Aaron Wochnitz pleaded guilty to charges of breaking and entering the media equipment centre of Hastings County Board of Education here and taking about $7,000 in equipment.

A police spokesman said today about $4,000 of equipment has been recovered.

Wochnitz received a nine-month indefinite sentence in connection with the same incident.

Two others are still waiting trial on charges arising from the same incident.

The police spokesman said three people were apprehended and their cars confiscated during a high-speed chase by Brighton provincial police.

Liberals Name Delegates

Thursday night Hugh O'Neil, Marty Halloran, Jo Anne McKenna, Dave Halliday and Peter Delany were named to represent the Prince Edward-Hastings Liberal Association at its seminar.

Mr. Halloran, riding president, explained the session as a place to "brush up on the basics of association work."

Grit Women Organize

TRENTON — The Prince Edward-Hastings Liberal Association is soon to have a women's auxiliary, Wednesday night's association meeting was told.

Bette Henley of Trenton was named chairman of the new group and will begin organizational meetings immediately.

Marty Halloran, president of the association said the women would be primarily responsible for social organizing and fund-raising... "mainly because they are good at it," he said.

'Board Is Becoming Travel Agency'

Trustee Objects to 3-day Trip for Students

PICTON — A three-day outdoor education field trip for Picton School grade eight students was questioned this week by Ameliasburgh school trustee Harmon Montgomery.

"This board is becoming a travel agency. We need to place more emphasis on spelling and less on these excursions," he told members of the Prince Edward board of education.

The proposed Jiles excursion was approved by trustees with the condition that students sponsor it themselves.

The suggested program includes canoe safety and skills, nature study, pond studies, hiking, map and compass work, camp craft and weather assignments.

Several trustees appeared reluctant to approve the trip, among them Dorothea Carson of North Marysburgh. Mrs. Carson commented that a three-day absence from school seemed too long for the students.

She was assured by Kente teacher Malcolm Cirtwell, that the trip was planned to permit students to leave on their regular Wednesday bus and return home on their usual Friday bus, heading off possible transportation problems.

It is expected that 84 grade eight pupils will participate in the field trip. They will be accompanied by five teachers, all experienced in outdoors-manship. Parents volunteers and secondary school assistants also will join the excursion scheduled for June 19, 20 and 21.

Issue Ends As Board Supports Lay Religion Teacher Approval

PICTON — The Prince Edward County board of education has voted to continue religious education in the schools under the direction of a qualified instructor, a clergyman or a layman authorized by area clergy.

A motion also was passed supporting statistical approval of Twila Langman, a lay instructor whose qualifications were questioned when she became a Carrying Place couple.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Skene addressed trustees last month to object to the quality of religious education at the Rednersville elementary school attended by their daughter. The couple also pointed out that Mrs. Langman was a lay instructor teaching without the official approval of the local clergy.

Their protests triggered strong public support for Mrs. Langman and the board received many letters and petition of endorsement. She will continue as an officially approved religious education teacher in the schools.

Watch That Ice!

TWEED (Special) — The Ministry of Natural Resources here has warned snowmobilers that ice on lakes in the northern Quinte area can now adequately support machines.

Ice can crystalize within a matter of hours, or even within minutes, losing its strength to support pedestrians and vehicles.

Cross country skiing is fair to good north of Highway 7 but only fair south of the highway. Snowmobiling is poor to very poor. Lake Echo is in the process of removing trail markers for the summer. Inlets and outlets are considered "most dangerous".

Picton Kiwanis Promote School Music

PICTON — Picton Kiwanis Club will sponsor a series of concerts in Prince Edward County schools to promote greater student interest in music education.

The proposal was approved this week by the Prince Edward board of education and a schedule for the concerts mapped out.

Kiwanian Jack Ward said that the Concert Brass group of Belleville has been invited to play a five-concert series in Prince Edward May 17.

The first two performances will be at Pinecrest Memorial school in Bloomfield during morning classes. Two additional concerts will be given at Queen Elizabeth school in Picton later in the morning and a third at Prince Edward Collegiate Institute in the afternoon.

After the performances the Kiwanis Club will circulate questionnaires to gauge student reaction. Based on this information the service club would direct the course of further musical education according to survey results.

"The purpose of this is to measure the interest we have for programs like this and to see what type is most feasible," said Mr. Ward.

Music Is More Than Singing

PICTON — An expanded instrumental music program for Prince Edward schools was urged among school trustees this week by Keith Barnett, Wellington Consolidated school principal.

In a panel discussion Mr. Barnett noted that too much emphasis seems to be placed on vocal music. He said that many of the pupils, especially boys, are self-conscious when singing, as their voices may be changing.

The principal added that group activity is much more popular among students of this age as it relieves a feeling of being singled out for possible ridicule by other students.

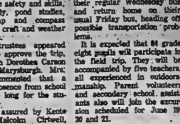
Lynne Thompson, a teacher at Sophiasburgh Central school proposed music education as an optional subject in grades seven and eight. She said that students at this level often are influenced by their classmates to consider the music program as "sissy".

History Society Will Meet

NAPANEE — The Napanee area in the 1800s will be the topic March 30 when Lennox and Addington Historical Society meets here.

A paper on the theme will be delivered by James Eadie, local high school history department head and society secretary.

The meeting will be held in the town hall at 8 p.m.



The society's annual meeting has been tentatively set for May 4 at the IOOF hall, with Prof. D. Swainson, Queen's University, as speaker.

It's Week For Secretaries

TRENTON — The week of April 21-27 was proclaimed Secretaries Week and April 24 as Secretaries Day by Trenton Town council last night.

Council pointed out it would not be its financial responsibility to pay for the standard proclamation in local newspapers.

School Board Rejects Students' OFY Plans

PICTON — The Prince Edward board of education has rejected two applications from area youths to use school buildings and equipment as part of a proposed Opportunities for Youth program.

"Project Open House," involving use of the gymnasium and one classroom at Prince Edward Collegiate Institute was suggested by FPEC student Pat Shea but rejected by trustees.

Mr. Shea sought the use of the school facilities to operate an eight-week summer program featuring sports, yoga, art, co-ordinated bus trips and pottery.

Trustees discussed the proposal at length and agreed that maintenance costs would be increased through additional use of the gymnasium equipment. Also, clean-up work scheduled for construction by fall would be greatly delayed.

The board member expressed concern for possible vandalism if the school were left open during the summer.

Harmon Montgomery of Ameliasburgh said that vandalism had occurred recently in Kette school with five teachers present in the building.

A student request for use of video equipment also was turned down by the board. Paul Burd, principal of FPECI, said the equipment is valued at $50,000. He added: "Even if the students inspect the equipment for all risks, they still will not be able to make a contribution to the cost of normal wear and tear."

The video equipment was requested for use in the production of a weekly show for community cable television.

Uganda's Troubles

A number of points emerge from the aborrive coup in Uganda. They reinforce the belief that while independence for black Africa is all very well it has not necessarily encouraged democracy (quite the opposite in fact) or improved living conditions, let alone calmed the maelstrom of tribal animosity.

Reports from Kampala spoke of heavy fighting around Makindye prison, said to have been the last home for a large number of military figures and civilian leaders put to death after Amin's military coup in 1971. It is estimated that as many as 90,000 persons have been tortured or killed in tribal massacres within the military.

Economically Uganda is said to have gone rapidly downhill under Amin. The expulsion of the Asian merchant element that was either a backbone of the economy had a lot to do with this. Prices have skyrocketed and even such basic commodities as bananas are in short supply. A touch of irony this, when we consider that recently Amin, expressing a desire to help Britain out of its economic troubles, said in effect, "we have plenty of meat and bananas."

Contrastingly, Amin now is finding that food items which once were plentiful are in short supply, and that the country has changed from a sugar exporter, for example, to a sugar importer.

Uganda is paying the price of inexperience and incompetence that has been the norm in many another state emerging from either a colonialist or a paternalist past. A classic example from the recent revolutionary past: Cuba.

Australian Incident

If there were to be any physical confrontation in the current state of political development in Australia we would have expected it to have been inspired by the antiorigines.

There have been a number of incidents of late some during the recent visit of the Queen, which indicate heightened political consciousness among the legendary native people of Australia.

But instead, an incident in Perth in which Prime Minister Gough Whitlam was punched, kicked and pelted with eggs and tomatoes came during a state election rally.

Given the fact that not all of the state governments in Australia are of the same persuasion as Mr. Whitlam's federal labor administration could have something to do with the eruption in Perth. Whether that is the case or not though, as a personal attack on the country's leader by an unruly crowd this one has nothing to commend it.

Smokes Costly

With the price of cigarettes going up will smokers continue to say they would rather fight than switch — to borrow from one well - known advertisement?

Will this be the straw that breaks the camel's back, or will smokers just accept their fate stoically as just another nail in the inflationary coffin?

Certainly it has been a while since the price of cigarettes went up, and that is more than can be said for a lot of consumer items, notably food.

Besides, what could the smoking addict switch to anyway? Not to candy, for it is taking another jump in price too.

Let's hope though that a goodly number will be encouraged to give up the habit, especially among the young, for there is no use kidding themselves that this is anything else but a health hazard.

Need We Say It

Got your Hydro bill? Out of sight man, isn't it? Wonder is there a tropical island somewhere that offers the simple life with some of the amenities. Certainly it is worth thinking about as inflation continues its destructive path.

Minister Says Business Should Blow Its Own Trumpet

By VINCENT EGAN
Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

Business has finally found a friend in Ottawa: Andre Ouellet, the postmaster-general.

He commended business—up to a point, anyway—for its contributions to the solution of social problems in a speech the other day.

His audience, the Canadian Club of Toronto, was one that was not likely to be hostile to such comments.

"The corporation is a victim of its achievements," Mr. Ouellet said.

"It has made our Western society the most affluent ever known, the healthiest, the most leisured and the most educated.

"Our rising standard of living has been plain for all to see, and people credit the corporation for it.

"So now, as they see the side effects—poisons,' smells, ugliness and noise—they blame it."

The corporation's real guilt, according to the youthful cabinet minister, is its success.

"It's been so successful we've given up the family farm, the family business, the small town, so that we could centralize production.

"We've given up self-sufficiency, pride in craft and belief in roots because they slowed the growth of the GNP.

"We've given up old-fashioned virtues like thrift and modesty and self-discipline because they were a drag on the market economy.

"We traded the ideal of sacrifice for an ideal of acquisition. We gave up the church for the gospel of productivity.

"But is this the fault of business for the way it has been? Or is it the fault of governments, and unions, and universities, for the way it provide countervailing values?"

In the view of many social activists, of course, blame for all of society's problems does belong to business—economically.

Corporations are constantly ever in their view, when they care or trade with some right wing regimes overseas even though that trade may create badly needed jobs in those countries.

Business arrangements made with equally illiberal left-wing regimes never attract much criticism from the activists.

The typical stance of executives on social questions is probably based on two factors:

—The executive's reluctance to go flying that sacred cow, profit and the sanctity of the company with his personal opinions.

But the same is on hesitancy to use Mr. Ouellet's words the "corporate dynamic" to help maintain the democratic order in institutions, in the face of growing efforts to replace them with the democratic apparatus of substitutarianism.

Election Financing a Tough Issue For Congress in the Wake Of Watergate's Stunning Revelations

By PETER BUCKLEY

WASHINGTON (CP) — Despite the clamor for election campaign reform in the United States as a result of the Watergate scandals, few issues face such a tough battle in Congress as the current efforts to end abuses in the financing of American elections.

The Senate, which passed one reform bill last summer only to see it die in the House of Representatives, opened debate on an even more ambitious measure Tuesday and promptly faced the prospect of a filibuster by conservative Southern Democrats.

The House, meanwhile, has only just begun studying its own reform measures. The process out there is expected to be protracted.

The term "Watergate" has come to mean scandals of many varieties. Among the most disturbing have been the revelations about campaign financing:

—The long-term methods used by President Nixon's election aides to extract sizable contributions for corporations and individuals.

—The illegal donations not only to Nixon's campaign but also to Democratic office-seekers.

—The allegations that many of those who contributed believed they were buying influence with federal departments and agencies or with powerful congressional committees.

—The almost universal habit of concealing large contributions by breaking them up into insignificant amounts donated to a host of shadow campaign committees.

The result of months of detailed exposes about such abuses has been a widespread public sentiment that reform is overdue. Few congressmen would dare announce now that they oppose campaign reform altogether, but there are sharp differences over how much reform is necessary or desirable.

Most measures propose at least partial funding from the public purse of campaigns for the presidency. Some go further, recommending that all national campaigns—for both primary and general elections, for the presidency as well as for Congress—get public financing.

President Nixon has come out lately against most public financing. So have several senators.

But the man who has begun to get the most attention is Wayne Hays, who wants no public financing at all in election campaigns. And Hays is a man to be reckoned with.

A 62-year-old Democrat, whose cool-smiling district of Ohio has been giving him big majorities for 25 years, Representative Hays has two important jobs.

He is chairman of the House administration committee, which has the responsibility for writing campaign legislation, and he is head of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, which raises and dispenses money to Democrats running for Congress in next November's elections.

The two hats worn by Hays recently provoked the campaign reformers in Common Cause, a self-styled citizens' lobby, to buy a full-page newspaper ad and trumpet: "There's another political scandal in town, but this one belongs to the Democrats."

Noting Hays's two jobs and his 15-month campaign to bottle up reform bills in committee, Common Cause asked: "Is it any wonder that his appetite for meaningful reform is near zero? How can the House Democratic leadership sanction such a scandal?"

The answer, as many political observers here see it, is that the Democratic majority in Congress is nowhere near unanimously enthusiastic about major reforms.

New election laws are passed by the same people who won election under the old laws. And the old laws have been demonstrated, in numerous studies, to give a substantial advantage to sitting members in the competition with challengers for campaign donations.

Members of the House, facing election every two years, are likely to be more sensitive to such fine points than the reform-minded senators, who have six years between elections.

Hays may be reflecting the private wishes of fellow congressmen more than their public attitudes. In any event, he appears to have the power to block any significant reform in Congress, either through his committee chairmanship or his control over some of the purse strings in the next election.

Contemporary Scene in Ontario: Women Police..Streakers..Inflation

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — As you may have noticed the Ontario Provincial Police is going feminine.

The force is recruiting 60 women police officers.

Requirements include that the recruits be not less than five feet four inches tall and 100 pounds in weight.

Is it recruiting for a police force or a ladies wrestling team?

Observers have been waiting for the first "streaker" to invade the legislature.

There was some suggestion that it might be Eddie Sargent, the Liberal member being both the biggest rebel and the biggest self-publicist in the house.

But one of the more astute minds said no.

"Eddie," he said, "likes clothes too much."

Will the next move be to decide that more days should be set aside for "professional development"?

Surely politicians need development as much as teachers do.

The Ontario Food Council market basket, the device the council uses to measure food prices, rose another .8 per cent in the past month.

It now stands at $78.50.

A year ago it was $68.17, in March 1973 it was $62.10 and in 1971 it was $57.17.

That's nearly 40 per cent over three years.

And food prices are still rising.

Worst of all this would appear to be one basket case that not a doctor in sight can minister to.

All governments appear just hopeless before it.

Bank Governor Throws Out Hint That James Coyne's Warnings On Inflation Decade Ago Were Correct

By VINCENT EGAN
Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

No early relief from inflation—nor from unemployment.

That's the outlook for the Canadian economy as seen by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

"It is not realistic, unfortunately, to expect rapid improvement in the rate of our domestic price level, in part because the price increases already experienced have yet fully worked their way through the cost structure," writes Gerald Bouey in the central bank's annual report just published.

"At a recorded level of unemployment of about 5.5 per cent in the labor force . . . we do presently reached not only the effective limits of our plant and equipment capacity but also a position where labor, too, was effectively in short supply."

The public has traditionally looked to the Bank of Canada to strike a balance between tolerable inflation rate and an acceptable level of unemployment.

In simple terms, increasing the money supply is held to encourage business demand and create jobs, at the expense of higher inflation—while tight money is said to discourage not but also to keep prices down.

Thus, a little dose of inflation has usually been regarded as a way to prevent unemployment.

One of Mr. Bouey's predecessors as governor of the Bank of Canada, James Coyne, looks ferociously against the easy-money, anti-unemployment position that he felt was being forced upon him in 1961 by then prime minister John Diefenbaker and Finance Minister Donald Fleming.

Calling for tighter money and denouncing the "abominable wickedness of inflation," Coyne was compelled to resign. Diefenbaker and Fleming applied the new rule—that politicians, not central bankers, would make the big decisions about economic policy.

The result: Inflation that grows worse year by year, month by month, without even the consolation of full employment to offset it.

Neither of Mr. Coyne's successors, Louis Rasminsky nor Gerald Bouey, has revived the controversy.

But in the central bank's carefully worded 1973 report, however, Mr. Bouey does cite "more substantial and persistent departures from reasonably steady monetary growth than would appear in retrospect to have been desirable," both here and in other countries.

Could that be the incumbent governor's discreet way of reviving the warning that Mr. Coyne issued so strongly (and ultimately in vain) in 1961.

Canada's nine per cent inflation rate in 1973 exceeded those of nine important trading nations, including the United States. It was surpassed only in Japan, Italy, Switzerland and Britain.

Mr. Bouey seems to imply that still higher inflation and more money won't necessarily further reduction in unemployment.

If that's the case, the time has clearly come to slow down the expansion of short-term credit to business (up 28 per cent last year) and money supply (up 15 per cent).

The Diefenbaker-Fleming theory of credit and money supply has made a mockery of saving, and provided no relief from unemployment.

A Housewife's Opinion Of Mrs. Plumptre

Letter in The Peterborough Examiner

On reading the remarks of Mrs. Beryl Plumptre, chairman of the Food Prices Review Board, one wonders whose side she is on, that of the consumer, whom she supposedly represents, or the fabulous food industry. Anyone who would come out with a statement like "The era of cheap is gone," is already prejudiced against the very job she has undertaken. Furthermore, she is betraying every Canadian housewife who is looking to her to defend them.

It is not many years past, during a serious period of unemployment, that the same lady was criticized by a Toronto news columnist for saying that "a certain amount of unemployment was necessary to balance the economy." The question immediately arises — how can any person who apparently looks at our Canadian economy from the point of view of the wife of a wealthy industrialist ever hope to cope with the severe problems we face tomorrow? It is an impossibility.

She has no understanding of nor compassion for the many pensioned housewife trying to feed and clothe the family of an ordinary wage earner on so much grocery money per week, whose husband is most likely helping to support Mrs. Plumptre's salary from his weekly deductions. Mrs. Plumptre appears to be living her time and our money.

A Tale Of Two Cities

From "Coming Events in Britain"

There is an apocryphal story which illustrates the feeling between Glasgow and Edinburgh. A woman was attacked in Princes Street Gardens and three men join, the story goes. A young Glaswegian visitor sprang to her rescue, wrestled with the men and strangled it. A Glasgow newspaper told the story with the headline "Glasgow hero rescues woman from fate." An Edinburgh newspaper's headline was "Glasgow hooligan murders Edinburgh man."

Packers Assailed By Whelan

OTTAWA (CP) — Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan criticized the country's meat packing industry Wednesday for refusing to "play fair ball" with a recently-instituted beef subsidy.

"If that's what you call good corporate citizenship, I don't appreciate it," he told the Commons agriculture committee.

Some packers simply did not want to make the program work.

Beef markets have been in a state of confusion since the subsidy—worth about $2.75 million a week—was announced March 15.

TORONTO (CP) — Delegates to the annual meeting of the Ontario Egg Producers' Marketing Board voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to support proposals for immediate steps to deal with eggs imported from the United States.

State Deputy Attorney-General Richard Cohen said Hollis Seeley, 63, of Gray was arrested on a charge of murder.

Police said the killing occurred at Seeley's home. Seeley later turned himself in.

Reverse Plan

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail says the province will reverse its position on dentalists and permit them to sell false teeth directly to the public if they pass licencing examinations.

The newspaper quotes a unidentified source close to the cabinet as saying Health Minister Frank Miller has drafted proposals that would grant dentists interim licenses to practice until they wrote the examinations.

Close Plants

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. announced Wednesday it will shut down four plants for periods ranging from one to two weeks next month because of continued declines in car sales.

Topless Ban

TORONTO (CP) — The Liquor Licence Board of Ontario (LLBO) has banned topless dancing in dining rooms and dining lounges of all licensed establishments in the province. Hugh Brown, LLBO registrar, said Wednesday the board's 89 district inspectors were instructed last week to begin notifying hotel owners of the ban.

Indian Claims Won't Halt Plan

TORONTO (CP) — Claude Bennett, provincial minister of trade and tourism, said Thursday he will not withhold an impending announcement on the proposed $82-million Maple Mountain resort project despite a challenge by a band of 200 Ojibwa Indians.

The government's decision on the resort project will be made public "as soon as cabinet has dealt with the item," Mr. Bennett said, adding a decision is expected this month.

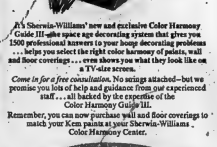
The Indians have challenged the government's right to 4,000 square miles of northern Ontario land, including the site of the government's resort project, about 200 miles north of Toronto.

Drop Campaign

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Labor Congress has given up on an attempt to mount a blue-collar worker organizing campaign through donations solicited from affiliated unions.

The congress announced the campaign last year and contributed $50,000 to a special organizing fund, while requesting affiliates to make their own financial input.

But a congress spokesman said Wednesday that only $9,000 had come from affiliates—nowhere near enough to mount an effective campaign. The $9,000 will be returned to the contributing affiliates.



A-arms Stored

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence Minister James Richardson said Wednesday that nuclear weapons for Canadian aircraft are stored at three Canadian bases under joint control of the American and Canadian armed forces.

These are all bases for CF-101 aircraft, charged with North American defence.

Law Reform Paper Stresses Compensation

OTTAWA (CP) — A new working paper of the Law Reform Commission of Canada suggests that victims of crimes must be compensated, either by the government or the offender, and that the victim should have an involvement in the sentencing of the offender.

At the same time the paper says restitution and compensation should be very much part of the criminal law and that these should, in the cases of many minor crimes, take the place of imprisonment.

The paper regards imprisonment as a last resort—virtually unproved as a cure or a deterrent—but says the fundamental rights of those put behind bars must be protected.

Arm of Law Longest For Young and for Poor

OTTAWA (CP) — The long arm of the law falls heaviest on the young, the poor, the powerless and the unskilled, says the Law Reform Commission of Canada.

Saying that lifestyles of the young and the poor are more likely to bring them to the attention of authorities, it adds:

"Discretion in law enforcement tends to divert business or professional classes from the criminal courts.

"Business frauds or thefts may often be dealt with by way of private settlement or restitution.

"On the other hand, people without money or influence, when caught in petty theft or shoplifting frequently are given no opportunity to seek redress and large numbers of them are prosecuted directly in the courts."

Kennedy Boy to Receive Serum from Mother's Blood

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Doctors say they are prepared to make a drug using the blood of Senator Edward Kennedy's wife to treat the couple's son, whose right leg was amputated to halt the spread of cancer.

Dr. Vera Beyers of the University of California Medical Centre said Tuesday the drug was tested here and a specimen of Edward Kennedy Jr.'s tumor is being held in a long-term culture.

The 12-year-old son of the Massachusets Democrat underwent surgery last November to remove a rare form of bone cancer.

More Details Now Printed Of Last Hanging of Woman

LONDON (CP) — In the fall of 1945, a young French-Canadian soldier came home to rejoin his wife and family, leaving behind five years of war, his tearful English mistress and their illegitimate son.

A decade later, the name of this discarded, unwilling mother became one of the best-known in Britain when she was hanged outside Holloway prison, the 15th and last woman of the century to be executed before the United Kingdom outlawed capital punishment.

Ruth Ellis died shortly after dawn July 13, 1955, for murdering a racing driver named David Blakely, maintaining to the end that although she loved him, "he got what he deserved."

Her trial and death have been the subject of a series of legal studies, films and publications of, all kinds ever since. But a book just published here throws new light on an aspect of the case which, had it been discovered before the hanging, would almost certainly have provided strong grounds for clemency or a new trial.

In The Trial of Ruth Ellis, published by David and Charles, authors Jonathan Goodman and Patrick Pringle argue that evidence they have discovered indicates decisively that there was an accessory to the murder, a fact never presented to the jury.

They also outline the extraordinary difficulties which lawyers and others had in even finding the address for a reprieve to the Conservative home secretary, Dwlyrn Lloyd George, son of the famous Liberal prime minister.

Ruth Ellis was born Oct. 9, 1926, in North Wales, as Ruth Neilson. Her father was a professional cellist, with little money, and her mother, a Belgian refugee from the First World War.

By the time she was 16, she was going for a photographic agency in London and singing with a dance band. It was at this time that she met and apparently fell in love with a Canadian soldier, referred to in official records only as Clare.

Her parents approved of the young man who was Roman Catholic like the Nellsons, and when Ruth became pregnant they proposed an immediate wedding.

But Ruth's mother was told by his commanding officer that Clare already had a wife in Canada. Mrs. Neilson, a devout Catholic, would not condone a divorce for him and the problems that were to lead Ruth to the gallows began.

At the end of the war, Clare sailed for home leaving a bunch of roses for Ruth and their son, Clare Andria Neilson. By that time she was broke.

She turned to nude modelling and began working as a hostess in a Mayfair nightclub to scrape together enough money to support herself and her son. She was doing well until she met George Ellis, an alcoholic dentist.

Ruth married him after a brief courtship but instead of a honeymoon she insisted on enter a mental home for treatment. Within two months he was released and during the several weeks he stayed sober, Ruth Ellis later said, she enjoyed one of her rare glimpses of contentment.

But her husband soon started drinking again and beating her. A daughter, Georgina, was born and a day after their first wedding anniversary, George Ellis applied for and eventually got a divorce.

A few months later, attractive, platinum-blonde Ruth met the two men who were to be her last lovers. They were Desmond Cussen, a rich, respectable, 30-year-old company director who posed no eligible suitor she ever had—and David Morfett Blakely, a childish, irresponsible, daredevil racing driver.

Cussen became violently infatuated but Ruth pettered Blakely, setting up house with him shortly afterwards and trying, without much success, to make herself acceptable to his fast-moving crowd.

The next several years were sparked with blistering fights between Blakely and his mistress.

She later moved in with Cussen but continued her affair with Blakely at the same time, spying on him, creating wild scenes when she found him with another woman and eventually eliciting a promise of marriage.

Finally, however, their relationship broke down completely and after she had been locked out of Blakely's house, Ruth Ellis took a six-shot revolver and waited for him in the dark outside the Magdala pub in Hampstead on Easter Sunday night, 1955.

When he stepped out, she fired five times before walking up to his prostrate body and emptying the last bullet into his back at a distance of three inches.

She then gave a full statement to police, admitting her guilt, refusing to ask for mercy and, later, refusing to allow her lawyer to plead temporary insanity.

She told friends she knew exactly what she was doing and that she felt she must be punished by hanging. But she insisted throughout the trial that she had obtained the gun from a friend three months before the shooting and that she had taken a taxi from her Kensington flat to the Magdala.

No check was made by police to discover whether the taxi story was true and although they knew the gun was well-oiled and extremely well-kept—which would not have been the case if, as Ruth Ellis said, it had been lying in a dressing-table drawer—no mention of the discrepancy in court.

The jury took 23 minutes to find her guilty of murder and the judge pronounced the mandatory death sentence. No clemency was asked for and none was recommended.

It was only on the day before her death that she told the full story to her lawyers and a transcript of her remarks is printed by Goodman and Pringle. It shows that she was helped in the preparation for the shooting by a man known only as X.

"I had been drinking Pernod in X's flat," the transcript reads in part. "X had been drinking too. I had been telling X about Blakely's treatment of me. I was in a terribly depressed state. All I remember is that X gave me a loaded gun.

"There's one more thing. You had better know the whole truth. I . . . said: 'Will you drive me to Hampstead?' He did so and left me at the top of Tanza Road."

But her statement came too late. There was not enough time for police to check her statement, since X could not be found, and the home secretary, declined to postpone the hanging. Her later corroborated her story but X denied it and no action was ever taken against him.

Canada and Euromart Co-operate on Environment

BRUSSELS (CP) — A vice-president of the European Commission Market's control commission hopes to visit Ottawa in June, one that an agreement has been reached about co-operation between Canada and the commission on matters connected with protection of the environment.

The proposed visit by Carlo Scarascia Mugnozza, whose commission duties cover environment problems, would give high-level points to what, then, will be the first moves towards implementing the new plans for mutual consultation and exchanges of experts in this field.

The agreement breaks new ground in Common Market-Canadian co-operation and raises the possibility of bilateral partnership in other fields, such as science and technology.

The Common Market already has a wide-ranging program covering environmental issues and the next few months will see specialists meeting with Canadian experts at the commission headquarters here or in Ottawa.

The meetings and sharing of information may produce more formal agreement, depending on how things go in the six months to come.

"If things go well, we'd suggest some added areas in which we'd also co-operate," a Canadian official said.

The possibility of Common Market-Canadian collaboration on environmental matters was first broached last fall during the visit to Ottawa by Sir Christopher Soames, the commissioner in charge of external affairs.

That happened to be the starting time of co-operation in the power field between the nine-country market and the United States, an undertaking which the Americans have found fruitful.

The Common Market and Canada have agreed not only on meetings between their specialists but also on consultations with one another before or during international environmental conferences.

Their exchanges of ideas probably will concern mutual efforts to limit fresh-water pollution, ways of measuring pollutants, information about the possibility damaging effects of certain fertilizers or pesticides and various facets of what specialists call "maintaining the ecological balance."

Attention also will likely be paid to depletion of natural resources.

The talks at Common Market headquarters leading to the current agreement were attended by Carl Pedersen and Paul Beaullieu, both of the Canadian mission to the community, and Michel Carpentier, who runs the European organization's environment program.

Cheats Spotted

TROIS-RIVIERES, Que. (CP) — A group of women in this city are thankful for taking a course in mechanics. Now they can spot any garage attendants trying to cheat them when they bring their cars in for servicing, said one woman: "We're so good now that even our husbands ask us for advice. And it's just a start."

Pill Freed Women

LONDON (AP) — The pill liberated women, and may have assured that there would be more women to use it. Doctors in the World Health Organization who studied Hungarian women found that the frequency of daughters soared among women who had been on the pill.

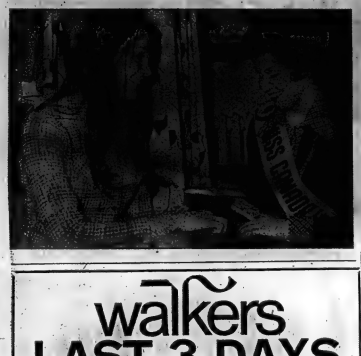
Miss Canada Models



Blair Lancaster, the 18-year-old Miss Canada from Burlington, Ontario, was the headliner at the Welcome to Spring fashion show Wednesday night sponsored by Tabernacle United Church Women.

McIntosh Brothers Stores Ltd. supplied fashions for the event.

Miss Lancaster, a former retail fashion management student at Toronto's Sheridan College, said she entered the Miss Canada competion because her mother made her.

The young woman plans to open a finishing school in her home town when her term as Miss Canada ends in November. She said she believes poise, etiquette and cosetics are important for women and girls.

Personal Exemptions: whom you can claim, when you can claim, how you can claim, and let's do it together now.

This page is entitled "Claim for Personal Exemptions" and that's what we're filling out. Now turn to your Guide and read Items 32, 33 and 34.

Everyone gets the Basic Personal Exemption of $1,600.
No matter who you are, what you earned, how old you are, or what your marital status is, you get the $1,600 (unless you arrived in Canada or left the country during 1973. Item 37 of your Guide covers these cases).

Some of us get the Age Exemption.
If you were born in 1906 or earlier, you claim an additional $1,000. In other words, if you were or turned 65 during 1973, you may claim the Age Exemption. (Guide Item 33).

Married Exemption: who claims who?
If your wife or husband had a net income of more than $1,700 during 1973, you cannot claim them. If, however, they had an income of less than $1,700, or no income at all, you can claim them.

And this is how you do it:

a) If the net income of your spouse was not more than $300, you claim the full $1,400.

b) If the income of your spouse was over $300, but less than $1,700, you do just as it says and deduct net income from $1,700 to get the amount of your claim.

What you do now is enter either $1,400 or the amount from (b) above, on Line 65. (Guide Item 34).

What if I got married during 1973?
If you were married for any part of the year (even a day) you can claim for the full year if your spouse meets the income requirements above. (Guide Item 34).

I understand that, but what's an "Equivalent to Married Exemption" and who gets it?
The first thing to do is read Item 35 of your Guide. As it explains, if you were single, divorced, separated or a widow(er), and supported a relative in 1973, you may be eligible. If that's the case, what you do next is find Schedule 6 (it came with your return) and read it carefully.

Now. Basically what all that means is this: If you were not married in 1973 (or were separated, divorced or widowed) and you were supporting a relative who was living with you and whose net income was not more than $1,700 during the year, you may claim the relative as an "Equivalent to Married Exemption".

Just answer the questions on Schedule 6 and follow through. The calculation is exactly the same as for Married Exemption. (Example: Let's say you are a widow who fully supported your 12-year-old son during 1973. In that case, you may claim him as a "Married Equivalent" for $1,400—instead of the standard $300 for children under 16.) Once you have it calculated on Schedule 6, you enter it on Page 4, Line 66 of your return.

Open your Guide to Item 36. Everything you need to know, including calculation example, is explained there. Follow it as you fill in the section of your return on Page 4 entitled "Exemption for Wholly Dependent Children". It's easy.

Just go slowly and make sure that you do provide all details specified for each exemption claimed. Your return cannot be processed until all information is included.

What about "Other Exemptions"?
That's clearly explained (with examples) in your Guide, Item 38.

Then what?

What about the Schedule?
If you have filled in all or part of Schedule 6, attach it to your return.

I still have a question. What do I do?
Follow April Aid. First read your Guide. If it's still not clear, phone or visit your own District Taxation Office.

Anything else?
Just one thing. Please check and re-check your calculations. Even the smallest error in arithmetic will delay the processing of your return.

That's it.

Together, we can get it done.

Ann Landers

Medication Often Blamed

Dear Ann Landers: The letter from "Fed Up" about the husband who wouldn't work because he was "ready to go," already on pills, and then "couldn't get started" after an overdose, eight years ago, I want to say a resounding Amen. Ann.—A Widow

Dear Widow: Dozens of people frankly place the blame for their problems on something completely unrelated in order to vindicate themselves. Before we were married, my husband blamed this same justification for his inability to wake up for his 8:00 a.m. classes in graduate school. When he complained to his doctor, the reply was, "Nonsense!" After a few weeks of drowsiness his body became regulated to the medication and had no effect on him whatever. So, he bought two more alarm clocks and went on to get his Ph.D.

If you print my letter it might help certain people shape up. Thank, Ann.—A Widow

Your reply was perfect. People frequently place the blame for their problems on something completely unrelated in order to vindicate themselves. Before we were married, my husband blamed this same justification for his inability to wake up for his 8:00 a.m. classes in graduate school. When he complained to his doctor, the reply was, "Nonsense!" After a few weeks of drowsiness his body became regulated to the medication and had no effect on him whatever. So, he bought two more alarm clocks and went on to get his Ph.D.

If you print my letter it might help certain people shape up. Thank, Ann.—A Widow

Dear Wit: Dosages of any medication often need to be regulated. Drowsiness is frequently experienced by patients when they first go on drugs to control seizures. Usually after a few weeks the body becomes adjusted and the drowsiness disappears. If it persists, however, the doctor often reduces the dosage. Sometimes a slight reduction spells the difference between a patient who functions well and one who is just sleeping around.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 20-year-old secretary who moved to Cincinnati from the Midwest. The first thing I was told when I took this job as private secretary to the senior vice president was: "Watch out for his wife." She is a very suspicious, neurotic person who used to work for him before they were married. She can't seem to get over the habit of coming to the office two or three times a week and looking over his correspondence. She even opens letters before he has seen them.

When Mr. VP. interviewed and hired me he made it clear that no one should be allowed to see the correspondence.

Yesterday when I heard Mrs. Needlecase's voice in the outer office I quickly gathered all the boss's correspondence, tossed it in the center desk drawer, locked it up and was busy filing when she came waltzing into the office to "look around."

I felt like a sneak and I'm not even sure I got away with it. Any advice for future encounters?—Like My Job

Dear Like: Anybody who is capable of such fancy mental footwork doesn't need advice from Ann Landers.

Should she come busting in before you get everything gathered up, ignore her until the mail is safely locked in the drawer. If she says anything, tell her, "That's where Mr. V.P. wants it until he returns."

Dear Ann Landers: My husband and I are "straight" people. We don't smoke dope or hang around with weirdos. We get along fine until the subject of his sisters comes up. One lives in a hippie commune and the other deals in grass. They both smoke and take pills.

My husband thinks they should be welcome in our home because he is their brother. I'm afraid if they get busted here we'll be involved. They drop in whenever they feel like it and spend the night. Could we be in trouble?—Marie

Dear M.: Probably not, but your husband owes it to you to insist that they not drop in unheralded and when they are guests they must leave the pot and pills elsewhere.

Successful Living

Stay Thin and Live Longer

By DORIS CLARK

We are told repeatedly that the thin very ones live the longest. There are some powerful arguments for refuting to jet "cream free" around our waistline or tummyline.

Dahlstar knows some of them well. So do heart patients; and arthritics. The doctors recommend them to carry around, the bigger the load your system has to lug.

Then there is that added accusation against sugar: that it is directly responsible for much tooth decay. I was shocked when I learned of one little two-year-old who was brought to her dentist with only little brown stumps for teeth. Questioning revealed not only a bad diet; but it also revealed that her regular bed-comforter was a pacifier dipped in sugar. So the sugar had all night to work on those teeth!

We have leaflets on reducing; one called "Simple Reducing Diet", which does it the slow, natural way. You don't lose pounds fast, but that means you don't lose hungers, either; nor proper nourishment. Send 25 cents, and an eight-cent-stamped envelope and it, and you are on your way.

Dear Doris: Thank you for the leaflet. I am enclosing 25 cents in stamps.

I am an old age pensioner in my 60th year. Have arthritis in my hands and in my spine. I have to wear a corset (I call it my doctor's harness) with three buckles at each side to bowel. I also have diabetics.

But I can walk, talk, laugh and smile. I have lots of friends and there are a lot worse off than me.

I am on a diet, so this is my dieter's grace:

Now I set me down to eat,
I pray the Lord I will not cheat.
If I should reach out for cake
or bread,
Please guide me to the next instead.
Have you heard that there is a new cereal on the market? It is made of yeast and milk and is high for those who want to rise and shine!

Pensioner: Keep your sense of humor and your love of life and nothing can really get you down. I have one beloved elderly friend, now in a nursing home, who never hangs up the telephone after our conversation without telling me her latest joke.

Some of them are just as corny as your shoe polish one. But we are both left chuckling — no what matter how corny!

Dear Doris: Your advice in the column, and your letters to me, have brought out a lot of problems. And I feel so much comfort when I get things off my chest.

Would you please explain to me the meaning of an I.Q. test? What it is for, who it qualified to give such a thing, and how?

What should one be aware of, or need to know in order to answer such a test, and are there any books a person could read?

Interested.

Dear Interested: What are you trying to qualify for? Some continuing academic education or a course in gerdening?

I.Q. means intelligence quotient; and what it really determines is how you rank with others, when it comes to native brightness. You can't study for it because this would mean it was a test of knowledge, not of your potential for learning.

A trained psychologist should be the one to give such tests. They are a help, in the hands of an expert, who can understand just what a commercial figure means and when and if it should be taken with a grain of salt. A lot depends on atmosphere, circumstances, a person's own peace of mind at the time the test is given.

There is helpful Canadian literature which may shed light on your problem. Write to Doris about it, in care of Successful Living, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply.)

British Anti-smoking Campaign Directed at Expectant Mothers

LONDON — The Government sponsored Health Education Council is spending £20,000 in an attempt to persuade pregnant women to give up smoking.

Doctor and midwives will help to circulate half a million leaflets through clinics, surgeries and local health authority offices and there will be support by networked television commercials, posters and advertisements in women's magazines.

Essentially the campaign follows a pattern for which the HEC has recently shown a marked preference: shock tactics.

The posters and leaflets show a pregnant woman, naked, pausing while she thoughtfully puts a cigarette to her lips. The legend asks, "Is it fair to force your baby to smoke cigarettes?"

The posters also explain that smoking can restrict a baby's normal growth inside the womb; make him underdeveloped and underweight at birth; make him vulnerable to illness, or even kill him.

"Last year in Britain alone, over 1,500 babies might not have died if their mothers had given up smoking while pregnant," they say.

Advice on how to stop smoking is included in the leaflets. One suggestion is to change daily habits and routine, sitting in a different chair or travelling in non-smoking compartments.

Alastair Mackie, Director General of the Health Education Council, said, "This is the first smoking and pregnancy campaign in this country and our tactics will be different from those we have previously in anti-smoking work. Everything will be aimed at one section of the community, expectant mothers, instead of the general public. But we hope prospective fathers will also give up their habits and encourage their wives to follow suit."

Horner, Jelinek Assail Curb on Pro Football

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons became an arena for sports debate Wednesday as MPs used the government's competition bill to discuss professional hockey and football operations.

Conservatives Jack Horner (Crowfoot) and Otto Jelinek (Toronto High Park-Humber Valley) led criticism of United States sports promoters whom they said entice the best Canadian athletes south of the border.

However, Mr. Horner urged the government to keep its hands off the U.S.-based World Football League (WFL) which has sold a franchise to Pete Bassett Jr. of Toronto.

Health Minister Marc Lalonde said earlier Wednesday he hopes to introduce legislation before Easter to stop the WFL and any other U.S. league from operating in Canada. Mr. Lalonde says the move is aimed at protecting the Canadian Football League (CFL).

Mr. Jelinek said lacking the WFL Toronto franchise will not help keep Canadian athletes at home because the new league will provide more football jobs for them. "I don't see it operating here. . . . Governments do not belong in the entertainment world . . . and that's what football is. We don't need to run after votes . . . like this silly minister of health and welfare is doing," he said.

Mr. Jelinek called it a paradox that the government has introduced a bill to stimulate competition while preparing legislation that will prevent competition between the WFL and the CFL.

The competition bill would bring professional and amateur sports under the jurisdiction of the Combines Investigation Act for the first time. It would be a crime to conspire or arrange to limit unreasonably the opportunities for participation in sport "or to impose unreasonable terms or conditions on those persons who so participate."

Mr. Horner took a shot at the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association (CAHA) which he said is not strong enough in protecting Canadian interests.

The National Hockey League (NHL) plays some money to amateur teams from which it drafts players, but the World Hockey Association (WHA) contributes nothing, he said.

"We should force the NHL and the WHA to pay something for development of the talent when they sign coming stars."

Some of the sting was taken out of Mr. Horner's criticism by Mr. Lalonde's earlier announcement that the CAHA has reached agreement with the WHA and the NHL on drafting junior players.

Later, Mr. Jelinek criticized the U.S. professional ice shows for taking "all of our top talents without contributing to the Canadian amateur organizations which have invested their time and money in developing these athletes."

Mr. Jelinek, who with his sister won the 1963 world pairs figure skating title, welcomed the government's proposal into the competition bill.

Inflation May Cut Armed Forces' Size

OTTAWA (CP) — Inflation and rising fuel costs have hit the armed forces, and Defence Minister James Richardson says he may have to keep the armed forces under their authorized strength of 83,000 persons.

The minister said Wednesday the forces now are about 1,200 short of the number authorized. He was amplifying, in an interview, a portion of a statement distributed at a Commons defence committee meeting Tuesday, which said rapidly-increasing pressure of rising prices—particularly since the advent of the energy crisis—is "making it increasingly difficult to support our current level of defence activities."

The statement added, however, "we intend to make certain that inflationary pressures on our personnel and operating costs will not absorb the funding intended for our planned increases in capital expenditures within the formula budgets."

This statement was made before federal-provincial agreement Wednesday that increased the price of Canadian-produced crude oil to $6.50 a barrel from $4, thereby increasing the price of at least some fuel for planes, motor vehicles and ships.

Asked how he plans to meet his capital costs, Mr. Richard son said one way will be to keep the forces below authorized strength.

Military officers, however, maintain they need every man authorized to them to provide the diverse services the forces are called upon to perform. They say the forces already are feeling the pinch of sending 1,100 men to the Middle East for United Nations duties.

Mr. Richardson announced in October that the defence budget would be allowed to grow seven per cent a year for the next five years. The base was the $2,163 million spent in the 1973-74 fiscal year.

Thus the estimate for the forthcoming fiscal year was $2,705 million. The government envisaged that personnel costs would increase six per cent a year and operating costs four per cent.

The plan was to have capital costs for new equipment and facilities rise to 20 per cent of the total defence budget from 11 per cent.

This ever-increasing capital spending has become necessary as the forces conducted a modernization program to make up for serious deficiencies in many areas that resulted from a three-year freeze on the budget that ended only last year.

George Hees (PC—Prince Edward - Hastings), the Conservative military critic, criticized the five-year program, which he said put the military under another freeze. He said the seven per cent would not even cope with the rising inflation rate.

Mr. Richardson said Wednesday it is too early to say whether inflation will wipe out the seven-per-cent annual increase.

He said if indications are that it will, he will have to determine whether the government should increase the annual percentage.

Death of Girl Consistent With Oxygen Deprivation

SUDBURY (CP)—The deterioration in the condition of a 18 - year - old Sudbury girl brought to Sudbury General Hospital after taking an overdose of pain-killing pills "was consistent with deprivation of oxygen," a medical expert said Wednesday at the inquest into the deaths of 23 persons at the hospital last year.

Dr. Stuart MacLeod, an associate of the Toronto Clinical Institute of the Addiction Research Foundation, said the decline in condition and the subsequent death of Susan Dupuis was not consistent with the inhalation of oxygen.

Miss Dupuis suffered a seizure in the treatment room shortly after arriving at the hospital's emergency room with her mother.

She then was treated with medical gas from a wall outlet, suffered a second seizure a short time later, and died after cardiac arrest.

Evidence presented earlier in the inquest showed that a mixture of nitrous oxide and oxygen lines occurred in January, 1973, and the problem was corrected in September, 1973.

Miss Dupuis was treated in the four rooms where medical gas pipes were said to have crossed.

Dr. MacLeod said a convulsion would not be unexpected in a drug overdose but stressed the girl should not have died.

Lawyer Richard Pierrard, representing the Dupuis family, said if letters requesting an earlier inquest into the girl's death had been heeded, "perhaps the problem could have been discovered and other deaths avoided."

Dr. Ross Bennett, Ontario deputy chief coroner and chairman at the inquest, refused to admit 10 letters held by the lawyer as evidence.

Jury foreman Barry Farmer said jurors had discussed the letters and had decided they would be of little help to them.

A Toronto pathologist testified that severe head injury and not nitrous oxide was the major contributing factor in the June deaths of four-year-old Michael Fleming.

Dr. Edward Hendrick said the boy was "bloodsucked from the time his head struck, a spot after being dragged by a pony at a neighbor's farm."

Pathologist Dr. Barnard Oliver said it was highly unlikely a person could survive that type of injury.

The inquest continues today.

Japanese Doctors Are Under Pressure

962-6161
"Serving the Quinte Area For Over 35 Years"

TOKYO (Reuters) — One of the most serious side-effects of Japan's rapid post-war urbanization has been the strain it has put on the country's medical services.

Japan has one doctor for every thousand people, but this statistic fails to reflect the true problem.

The highest concentration of doctors is in the former imperial capital of Kyoto, The lowest is in the Saimata prefecture on the western edge of Tokyo, which is building satellite towns to take the population overflow from the capital.

On the whole, Japan is fairly far down the list in the ratio of doctors to patients, in Israel the Soviet Union and most of Western Europe, a doctor has half the caseload of his Japanese counterpart, according to United Nations statistics.

Complicating the situation further is the fact that Japan has no welfare system, and medical costs can be high.

Most Japanese belong to private medical insurance schemes to which their companies are affiliated. This can take care of up to 70 per cent of the cost. Only those over 70 receive free medical treatment.

There are about 8,100 hospitals in the country, about 55 per cent of them privately run. There is about one bed available for every 10 Japanese. But many doctors close their hospital or medical centre to patients during the night, operating them like a normal company or office.

The sick have the option of waiting until opening time at about 9 a.m. or looking around for doctors willing to offer treatment at any hour of the day.

Patients in the overcrowded cities often have to wait for three or more hours until their turn comes for a consultation or treatment, basing a matter of minutes. Many hospitals are considering the employment of more computers to ease the situation.

The problem has been aggravated by the fact that as a nation the Japanese are getting less healthy all the time. This is blamed on lack of exercise due to the increased urban living and worsening pollution fouling their air, water and food supplies.

Pipeline from Adriatic To Serve Three Lands

VIENNA (Reuter) — Hungary and Czechoslovakia have joined Yugoslavia in a multi-million-dollar pipeline project that will reduce their dependence on Soviet oil.

Scheduled for partial operation by the end of 1975, the Adria pipeline is the first attempt by Communist governments to link the Adriatic Sea with major industrial areas on the Danube.

The scheme was first discussed 10 years ago. It was given new urgency by Arab oil cuts after the Arab-Israeli war last October and an agreement among the three countries was hurriedly signed in mid-February.

The pipeline will be used to pump Middle East oil to industrial centres in Yugoslavia, Hungary and Czechoslovakia after unloading at a big new tanker terminal on the Yugoslav island of Krk in the northern Adriatic.

Total costs are estimated at $350 million. Already, Poland and Romania have shown interest in the scheme, and there is a possibility they may also ask to tap the pipeline, although probably only for small quantities.

After years of difficulty in obtaining sufficient supplies from Russia, Hungary's allocation of five million tons a year through the pipeline will almost satisfy its total oil import needs.

Last year, Hungarian imports from the Soviet Union totalled 8.3 million tons, and Middle East countries supplied about 700,000. For 1974, the Soviet Union has promised 8.7 million.

In 1972, there were tense exchanges between Budapest and Moscow over the supply of oil and other raw materials.

Even if Hungary fails to take up its full option from the pipeline, it will have the assurance of an alternative supply route. So far, oil landed at Adriatic ports has involved costly road transportation to Hungary.

Czechoslovakia, also to be given a five-million-ton annual entitlement via the pipeline, now gets more than 90 per cent of its oil from Russia. But Prague is looking into other possibilities as well, including supplies from Iran, Iraq, Nigeria and Libya.

The current energy crisis, although affecting Eastern Europe only marginally, has taught Communist governments that it is wise to have more than one source of supply.

Hungary and Czechoslovakia are each contributing $25 million for construction of the pipeline and loans are being sought from the World Bank and commercial banks. Yugoslavia also hopes for credits from oil-producing Kuwait.

The main purpose of the 437-mile pipeline is to supply Yugoslav needs. With an eventual capacity of 34 million tons a year, 34 million tons will stay in Yugoslavia.

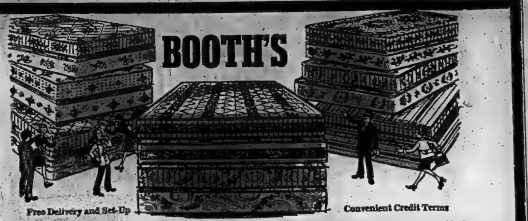
Ontario Can Live With Price Boost

OTTAWA (CP) — Most Ontario motorists can expect to start paying about 7¢ more for a gallon of regular gasoline in two to three weeks as a result of the new national price policy, Energy Minister Darcy McKeough said Wednesday.

He said the new policy, hammered out at a five-hour closed meeting between Prime Minister Trudeau and the provincial premiers, would not mean a 20-per-cent increase in the price of heating fuel in Ontario west of the Ottawa Valley line.

The new prices will not take effect until current inventories are exhausted.



Mr. McKeough and Premier William Davis spoke to reporters after Mr. Trudeau announced the new policy to establish a price of $6.50 a barrel for western oil, starting Monday. The price was frozen at $4 last September when Canada threatened to escalate the sense of world-wide shortage this year. Mr. McKeough said Ontario had bought about 85 per cent of its oil from the Middle East oil embargo, and would mean a 1.5-per-cent increase in Ontario's consumer price index.

Mr. Davis said he was pleased with the policy, saying the new rate was substantially below the world price of slightly more than $18.50 a barrel and would keep Ontario industry competitive in world markets.

Ontario had sought a 26 dollar domestic rate, but Mr. Davis said "we can live" with the extra 50 cents.

The province will consume 200 million barrels of oil/problem."

A seven-year-old Campbellford Holstein cow, a constant record setter in her class, has recently regained her world record in milk production and in doing so has raised comment in the House of Commons from Agricultural Minister Eugene Whelan.

In his Commons speech Friday, Mr. Whelan said "This great cow" might be the key to a "tremendous increase" in domestic milk production.

Mr. Whelan said the agriculture department became so interested in the Campbellford area high milk producer that the government "had our inspectors actually sleep in the barn to make sure this cow was not being fed any drugs, etc."

"When this cow gave this much milk, some people said that she had just gone crazy," Mr. Whelan said.

But the animal's owners, Clare and Harold Ingram, living on the 7th concession of Seymour township east of Campbellford, were just ordinary dairy farmers and simply "gave her another shovelful of feed every time they went near the cow."

"And she ate it".

Today Harold Ingram, the junior partner of the farmson" lnspbell Farms dairy farm operation confirmed that the agricultural minister had said.

He even admitted that they had become worried with all the government inspectors around and had written the agriculture minister to say that they are not "a bunch of thieves or rascals and that they were doing just what they should".

Mr. Whelan replied to the Ingram letter and told them they should protect America's cows, because "if this cow produced a calf calf you can imagine how valuable it would be to an artificial insemination unit."

"If the offspring of this calf were anything like his grandmother, you could imagine the tremendous increase in production that could occur all over Canada."

But the agriculture minister's information, while correct as far as it went, is not quite up to date.

In fact the Ingersoll Holstein has always been a heavy producer and setting records is nothing new for her.

And two of her calves are already owned by the Ontario Artificial Insemination Unit at St. Hyacinthe, Que. The Belleford cow has given birth only to bulls but unfortunately only the two bulls with the Quebec unit are living.

Mr. Ingram said the other three bull calves had been lost.

But back to the high producing Holstein.

As a two-year-old, "Rag Apple" was the Canadian champion for junior cows, was Canadian and World Champion as a four-year-old Canadian champion for mature cows as a six-year-old and last year, as a seven-year-old, regained her world title.

Mr. Ingram Sr. has always been a dairy farmer and about 15 years ago decided to make the switch to registered Holsteins.

Today the Ingrams have 103 head of purebreds including 50 milkers. But despite the fact they own a world famous cow, the Ingrams never show their animals at district fairs. "We are too busy," was the comment.

The record-setting Ingram cow was sired by Belleside President, "a bull formerly owned by Eastern Breeders. The sire is now dead.

A representative of Eastern Breeders stationed at the Belleville office say what sets the Ingram cow so remarkable is the high butter fat content of her milk.

The fat content of the cow's milk during her last lactation period averaged an astonding 3.73 per cent and she is said to be the first cow in the world ever to produce more than a ton of fat in a 365-day period.

Her record on a milk production of 36,594 pounds was 2,008 pounds of fat.

And the high fat content of the cow's milk is not a flash in the pan. Records show that her milk has been consistently over four per cent in butter fat.

And needless to say, the cow's two sons now with the St. Hyacinthe breeding unit are in big demand as sires.

In view of the mother's record, the two young sires are known as the gold rush bulls.

Outward Bound for Lahr

Three Belleville educators will visit Lahr, Germany later this in the spring to study the Belleville-Lahr student exchange.

They are L. F. Reid, deputy director of education, with the Hastings county board, K. J. Neville, superintendent of the separate school board, and Ross Gender, a gallinous councellor at Centennial Secondary School.

The three men will fly to Germany April 28 on an Air Transport Command Boeing 707 and will be guests of the city of Lahr until they return May 6.

The educators will study German schools and courses of study and will plan a program for the Belleville exchange students going to Lahr next year.

No Protests To Rezoning

There were no objections raised Wednesday evening at a public meeting called by the Belleville Subordinate Planning Advisory Committee for consideration of two applications for zoning changes in the city's west end.

One of the applications was for rezoning of a lot at the southeast corner of Dundas and Wilkie Streets to allow construction of a 50-bed nursing home.

The other was an application to rezone the east side of O'Hare Street from R4 to R1 for single family residential purposes. The area is now zoned for townhouses.

Plans for the 50-bed nursing home call for a single-storey structure with driveway entrances off Wilkie Street.

Both applications under consideration last night will now go to the Quinte Planning Board for approval.

Youth Hurt

William Templeton, 13, of 206 Bleecker Ave. is listed as being in satisfactory condition in Belleville General Hospital after he was struck by a car driven by Robert R. Mitchell, of RR 7 Belleville early yesterday afternoon.

Police say that the Mitchell vehicle was eastbound on St. Paul St. around 12:05 p.m. when the youth attempted to cross the roadway from the south side.

Backing a Fighter

The theme of this year's Easter Seal campaign is Back a Fighter. And that's what the city's Yardmen were doing when they donated a $1,000 cheque to the campaign. This year's Timmy, Billy Lynch, a Belleville boy, was on hand to accept the cheque for the local branch of the Ontario Society for Crippled Children. Giving him the cheque are Yardmen president, Ted Branton, right, and Yardmen secretary, Ernie Belanger.

Easter Seals Campaign Is Off to Good Start

Belleville is a city that believes in opening up its heart to crippled children. For one thing, over $7,000 of the city's local goal of $10,000 for the branch of the Ontario Society for Crippled Children has been attained.

At Sun Valley this week, the Rotary Club, sponsors of the Easter Seals, held a dinner meeting with Timmy as one of the special guests. Whipper Billy Watson was also in town but couldn't because of illness.

So, talking to Rotary members and their guests was John Butler, a supervisor with the Ontario society involved with service club relations.

Mr. Butler, through his talk and with the aid of slides, explained what has been done so far to help children with physical handicaps and what needs to be done.

He said that the province's health scheme doesn't help the society with funds to carry on its work.

"The question that we're asked most often is this, "Is there a need for an organization such as the Ontario Society for Crippled Children in a province with a total medical care program.

"What Medicare means to the society is nothing. The plan pays your doctor bills and your hospital bills. In the 53 years of the society, we've had none of our doctor or hospital bills paid this way.

"Medicare is not saving the society money. As to what happens in the future we don't know," said Mr. Butler.

"But there are other needs handicapped children have besides doctor and hospital bills." said Mr. Butler. He went on to mention the needs for artificial limbs and the progress made in that direction.

Mr. Butler pointed out to his audience the services provided when they buy Easter Seals.

"The most important service is nursing service. At present we have 62 nurses in Ontario working with handicapped children and their parents.

Another service mentioned by Mr. Butler was that of the Society's camping program. Through slides and words, he explained that through going to camp and mixing with children with different handicaps, the handicapped child can see that there are others less fortunate than he is."

Other services mentioned by Mr. Butler that the Society provides are travelling clinics to help children in remote areas of the province.

"We have about 24 travelling clinics operating across Ontario each year."

He mentioned the need for treatment facilities in the province. "Right now there are 14 treatment facilities across Ontario. We could do with six more.

"But not in this area. We have all the facilities we need here right now. We need facilities in the northern parts of the province."

Mr. Butler pointed out the discrimination that exists today towards those who are handicapped.

"Nine out of ten handicapped people can't go to a library because there is no ramp for their wheelchairs. They can't go to the theatre or to a restaurant or into civic buildings because there are no ramps provided.

"This is a job all segments' of society can work toward. Provision should be made to allow for these in wheelchairs" he said.

Mr. Butler spoke on the problems physically handicapped have in attaining jobs.

"If the handicapped are well-trained, qualified and capable they should be employed. Nothing says they can't do the job. They are entitled to opportunities. And they are entitled to have jobs," concluded Mr. Butler.

A Matter of Practice

Wendy Sunderland, Belleville General Hospital senior physiotherapist, helps John Farrell, 4, sister Mary, 3, with asthma breathing control. While youngsters are taking inhalation at Wednesday night clinics, parents are also learning from specialists on how to cope with problem.

Asthma Clinics Help Clear Misunderstanding

Asthma, like most other physical complaints, doesn't draw age differences.

But it takes on an added dimension when children are involved.

This is a guiding principle behind a current weekly series of night clinics and seminars at Belleville General Hospital. The program, organized co-operatively by BGH and the Hastings-Prince Edward TB and Respiratory Diseases Association, strives for a multiple goal.

Nearby, their parents simultaneously participate in educational sessions with medical specialists. The knowledge gained will help the adults to assist their offspring in turn.

Asthma is more widespread than may be realized, particularly among youngsters, says Margaret Hallam, the association's executive secretary.

"I'd say there are an awful lot of children with asthma," she surmises.

For that reason, Mrs. Hallam admits to some surprise the program hasn't drawn more participants.

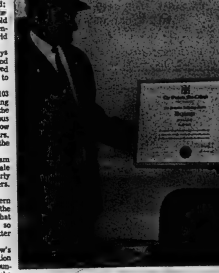
In all, thirteen youngsters have been registered for the Wednesday night series, now nearing mid-point. "then the first program was tried in Trenton last year, 16 children were registered.

However, she says, the association will continue to organize future programs—if public response warrants support.

A main thrust of the program is to dispel the psychological side effects on both adults and youngsters of the problem. Children stricken with an attack may get mentally zip tight, says Mrs. Hallam. The result could slow development since the youngsters, aware of their condition, may lack participate in childhood activities for fear of prompting attacks.

Therapy sessions include breathing exercises relaxation control and games, all aimed at acquainting youngsters with their psychical conditions and limitations, heightening their ability to cope "in their own way", says Wendy Sunderland, senior physiotherapist.

Sometime parents are also being educated on the problems facing their youngsters by local and visiting specialists. They're also reaping benefits, says one participant.



"It's fot frightening when you know what's happening," says Sandra Farrell, whose two children—Mary, 3, John 4— are taking exercises across the ball in the BGH Edith Cavell Building. "We were getting up tight."

She and her husband, John, asked around to discover what other couples were doing, and wound up joining the program.

Explains Mrs. Hallam: "If a parent gets up tight during a child's attack, this only compounds the problem for the youngster. If they understand what's happening they can concentrate on easing the situation."

Constable Transferred

Constable Barry Browning 22, has recently been transferred to the Thunder Bay OPP detachment. A native of Belleville, he joined the force in 1962, and served first in Sharbot Lake, then moved to Napanee in 1971. He and his wife Sharon (nee Smith) have one daughter, Kerry, 4.

First Graduate

Captain Ray Reid, of the Belleville Fire Department, recently returned from the Ontario Fire College in Gravenhurst with Belleville's first fire college graduation diploma. Over a period of eight years, Captain Reid studied for and completed a 22-week course, conducted by the Ontario Fire Marshal's office, in fire prevention, operations and administration. Three other Belleville firefighters, Deputy Fire Chief Bob Emerson, Capt. Fred Hosking and Capt. Bruce Diamond, will join Capt. Reid as graduates of the college, when they complete their studies in 1974. In congratulating Capt. Reid, Fire Chief Leo Culhane noted that the diploma represented a lot of hard work and was indicative of the firefighters' desire to strive for higher standards. "It didn't come easy," the chief said. "It required a lot of study and a lot of sacrifice. I'm sure the department will benefit from the instruction Capt. Reid received," he said.

Drive-in Office Broken Into

Deputy Police Chief Harold Reid reports that someone broke a window in the theatre's ticket office some time between 11:45 a.m. and 2:45 p.m. yesterday. A cover was removed from the window to the main office, also, he said.

Nothing has been reported stolen. Damage resulting from the break-in was estimated at $50.

Veisor Proves Worth

By GLENN COLE
The Canadian Press

Midway through this National Hockey League season, goalie Mike Veisor was wondering if he would be better off playing in the Central Hockey League rather than sitting on the bench.

Veisor, last year's CHL rookie of the year and top goaltender, had been watching Tony Esposito perform his astonishing magic for Chicago Black Hawks.

But with Chicago more or less resigned to finishing second in the West Division behind Philadelphia Flyers, coach Billy Ray decided to give Veisor some experience.

In the seven games Veisor has started this season, Chicago has won six and tied one. The latest win was 5-3 over Toronto Maple Leafs Wednesday night.

Philadelphia won 6-2 over St. Louis Blues, Detroit Red Wings downed Buffalo Sabres 3-1, Minnesota North Stars and Pittsburgh Penguins tied 3-3, Boston Bruins edged New York Rangers 3-2 and New York Islanders and California Golden Seals tied 2-2.

Black Hawks 5 Maple Leafs 3

Veisor, who once played with Hamilton and Peterborough in the Ontario Hockey Association Junior A series, blocked 32 shots.

Jim Pappin scored into the empty net with 11 seconds left to clinch the win.

Dale Tallon with two, Dick Redmond and Cliff Koroll scored the other Chicago goals. Inge Hammarstrom scored before and Brian Glennie added the other Leafs goal.

Flyers 6 Blues 2

Goaltender Bernie Parent gave up two goals on 29 shots.

Parent, who won his 44th game of the year, is playing an NHL record set by Terry Sawchuk in 1956-57 and again in 1951-52.

The Flyers now lead second-place Chicago by eight points. Each club has six games to play.

Red Wings 3 Sabres 1

A power-play goal by defenseman Jack Lynch early in the third period broke a 1-1 tie and the Red Wings went on to score their first win over the Sabres in six tries this season.

Bill Hogaboam and Guy Charron scored the other Detroit goals. Gerry Meehan scored for the Sabres who now trail fourth-place Toronto by eight points in the East. Buffalo has five games to play.

Penguins 3 North Stars 3

Lowell MacDonald scored three goals, two of them in the third period, to give the Penguins the tie.

Crusaders to Second

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ron Ward has been a driving force for Cleveland Crusaders of the World Hockey Association since he was traded to them in mid-season by Los Angeles Sharks.

Ward scored three goals Wednesday night to lead Crusaders into second place in the East Division with a 5-4 overtime victory over Quebec Nordiques. He has 18 goals in 20 games with Cleveland. That raised his season total to 21 goals and 28 assists for 89 points. He finished second in the WHA scoring race last season.

In less than two years he has played for New York Golden Blades, Vancouver Blazers, Los Angeles and the Crusaders.

In other games Wednesday, Minnesota Fighting Saints defeated New Jersey Knights 6-4, New England Whalers pounded the Sharks 7-1 and Houston Aeros bounced Vancouver Blazers 5-1.

Edmonton Oilers meet Toronto Toros in Ottawa tonight, Los Angeles Sharks Quebec and Cleveland plays New England.

New Jersey 4 Minnesota 6

Mike Walton scored his 34th goal of the season to remain seven points ahead of New Jersey Knights' Andre Lacroix in the race for the WHA scoring championship. Walton has 113 points.

But it was Murray Hunt[illegible] two goals and an assist that paced the Saints to their victory over the Knights.

Los Angeles 1 New England 2

Linesman Al Karlander and Mike Byers each had two goals and John Pratt added five as shots for the Whalers who had three goals in the first period.

New England needs only one more point in three remaining games for their second straight East Division title.

Houston 5 Vancouver 1

Houston Aeros scored four goals within 3:28 of the second period, including Murray Hall's 30th goal of the season, and ended up blanking all eight games against Vancouver this year.

Frank Hughes scored his 30th and 40th goals of the season.

GOLF CHAMP DIES

VANCOUVER (CP) — David Black, former champion Canadian golfer and member of Canada's Golf Hall of Fame, died Tuesday at the age of 86. In a career spanning almost 50 years, he won four Canadian professional championships and the British Columbia Open twice, and played visiting champions on Vancouver's Old Shaughnessy Heights, where he spent 25 years as professional. He retired in 1946. Black was selected to the hall of fame in February, 1973, and was previously named to the B.C. Sports Hall of Fame.

MVP Award

One consolation after last night's Metro Junior B final game for the Belleville Bobcats was the selection of winger Mark Coates as the most valuable player in the final series. Steve Coates accepts the Trophy from Metro Jr. B convenor Ernie Jones. Coates topped the list of playoff scorers on the Cats with 20 goals and 15 assists in 16 games as well as providing excellent all round hustle and the leadership the team needed to get to the final round.

Blues Shade Cats for Metro Honors

By MIKE BRADSHAW — Junior B franchise through thick and thin for many years, certain questions remain unanswered.

Sports Staff Writer

BRAMALEA — Hockey enthusiasts, who have been around a while, may well remember the famous curse of Chicago Black Hawk official when he was ejected from his position with the club.

"It happened again," sighed Matthews, "next year, well, next year is next year. I don't know what my plans are or what the team is going to do."

The Hawks were told they would never win a National Hockey League Pennant.

For players like Dave Taylor, Tim Yohn, Kevin Joudrey and Bob Moore, hockey on the Junior level is all over.

It is not know who put the hex on the Belleville Bobcats, but when the curse was placed it must have been at least a double whammy.

"(think I might play a little Gas House," added Taylor, "what I intend to do though is get into the house leagues and help out the little fellows."

For the second consecutive year the Bobcats have been denied a Metro Junior B Championship being beaten out of the best of seven final series 4-3.

For other players like Jim Richardson and Mark Coates things have just begun to happen in hockey. The two Bobcat standouts are expecting scholarships at university.

Wednesday night here, Belleville came out on the short end of a heartbreaking 5-4 score and watched the Bramalea Blues claim the Metro League honors.

Coates is a natural for a scholarship. Mark kept the Cats clicking throughout the playoffs and was top scorer and top point getter with 22 goals and 15 assists in 16 games.

For some players in the Cats lineup it was just the beginning. For others it meant their hockey careers were over. For the Belleville coach and manager it was just plain disheartening.

His efforts did not go unrewarded. Coates was nominated the Most Valuable Player in the final series, but even the MVP honor was second to the flashy Blues winger.

"It's hard to say what happened," said coach Moe Hunter, "what can you say?

"I'd gladly trade this trophy for the one they've got down here," said Mark, "at least you can drink champagne out of the one they've got."

"Two years in a row," added Hunter sullenly, "well, at least nobody can say we don't go out without a fight."

The Bobcats' loss was by no means through a lack of effort. Both teams performed extremely well and the fans got their money's worth of hockey.

After a few minutes the Belleville coach regained composure and said, "When you've got a hot goaltender he can carry you through a series. Oakes is fairly good but he was on a hot streak and when you're hot you always get some lucky breaks. That's what did it to us."

Even start to finish the game went end to end.

For Manager Jim 'Snips' Matthews who has carried the Bobcats franchise through thick and thin for many years, certain questions remain unanswered.

Offensively, the Bobcats looked very strong. Players were hustling both ways, but Joudrey, Coates, Richardson and Grant Geegan were the most impressive... Everyone played well and they played together. It was obvious they wanted the victory as a team not individually.

On defence, Dave Flesch and Norm Archery were strong as the Cats blueline, but with the great performances the Bobcats have had, by their four defencemen during th playoffs no one could say Yohn or Taylor weren't excellent at their position.

Bramalea jumped into an early lead when Dan Walker scored on a power play at 1:58 of the first period.

The Cats came back at the seven minute mark on Coates' power play tally. John Sergeant and Arney assisted.

Belleville went ahead 2-1 at 19:57 when Geegan combined w i t h Rob Foster and Richardson.

The Blues came back with two quick goals and by the 13:36 mark were in front 3-2. Tom McLeod and Dean Hartwell got those two.

In the second period the Blues controlled the play and outshot the Cats 18-10 Clark worked wonders in the Belleville net, but was beaten by Hartwell at the 9:25 mark.

The Bobcats came out revitalized in the third period and at 2:09 Barney Holmes made it 4-3. Joudrya and Yohn got the assists.

Bramalea wasn't about to sit back however. Less than a minute later Mike Forbes scored what proved to be the game winning goal.

Bill Joyce broke into the Belleville end and fired a shot at Clark, but the defender came right back to Forbes and he lifted it into the net.

At 4:11 Coates scored his second of the game and brought the Cats to within one goal again, but that was as close as the locals got. Sergeant and Yohn drew assists.

The Bobcats did everything to even the score, but fate was against them and they fell prey to the 5-4, score.

Bramalea took eight of the games 12 penalties and outshot the Cats 40-28.

The Blues now advance to all-Ontario play offs where they meet Owen Sound Greys in the semi-finals.

The perfect car for its time is a new Volkswagen called Dasher, a remarkable car that does everything you want a car to do these days.

For example, high power and good gas mileage normally don't go together. But Dasher has an astounding new, four-cylinder engine that does a hot 0-50 in 8.5 seconds and also gets 28 miles out of the gallon.*

If you're like most people you want a roomy car. And you want lots of trunk space. But you also don't want a big car. Well, Dasher solves the problem. Technical innovations — some of them will amaze you — have kept Dasher's machinery incredibly compact. So while the car isn't big, the part where the people go is big.

Best of all, wait till you see how Dasher handles.

Dasher's drive wheels are up front, right under the engine. This gives you control you've never felt before in a conventional car. As well as traction on curves and in mud and snow and ice that's nothing less than spectacular.

Dasher also comes with a miraculous little thing called the Skidbreaker.

Miraculous, because the Skidbreaker causes the Dasher to move straight ahead as you brake, when one side of the car is riding on ice or snow, a normally ticklish proposition.

Dasher is designed to be reliable (who knows how better than we?). It needs maintenance only at 10,000 mile intervals. It's made easy to repair. It takes electronic analysis. And it's covered by one of the most advanced plans of them all, the VW Owner's Security Blanket.

The Volkswagen Dasher. Once again we've found out how to do it years ahead of anybody else.

Gaylord Perry Has the Feeling He's Moving On

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gaylord Perry says he has the feeling he is being watched this spring. And it's not only to see whether he is throwing a spitball.

"I know the Orioles are scouting me, and I would understand if the Indians were to trade me," Perry said after he and two Cleveland relievers combined for a one-hitter in defeating California Angels 4-1 Wednesday. "If Phil Seghi (Indians general manager) gets a good offer for me, I realize he can't very well turn it down."

Baltimore scout Bill Werle was in the stands at Tucson, Ariz., as Perry allowed only a triple by Denny Doyle in seven innings, while striking out seven and walking two.

Elsewhere in exhibition baseball, New York Mets edged Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3, Milwaukee Brewers defeated San Francisco Giants 4-3, New York Yankees beat Atlanta Braves 4-1, Boston Red Sox defeated St. Louis Cardinals 7-2.

Montreal Expos trimmed Philadelphia Phillies 6-5, Los Angeles Dodgers beat Texas Rangers 9-7, Houston Astros squeaked by Detroit Tigers 3-2, Cincinnati Reds downed Chicago White Sox 7-3, San Diego Padres nipped a split Milwaukee squad 8-6 and Oakland Athletics defeated Cleveland Indians 5-4.

The Padres built a 7-1 lead and then held off a Milwaukee rally when Ron Brewer scored twice in the seventh inning and drove times in the ninth.

St. Louis hurler Bob Gibson was touched for a two-run homer by Bernie Carbo, and the Red Sox scored two more runs against him in the fourth.

Tom Paciorek's bases-loaded walk broke a 5-5 tie as Don Stanhouse walked four of the five Dodgers he faced in the seventh inning.

The A's finished their spring series with the Cubs with three victories in four outings after a two-run spurts in the first and fifth innings.

Outfielder George Foster delivered a two-run double that capped a three-run Cincinnati scoring spurt in the third inning.

Ed Sprague pitched three scoreless innings as the Brewers defeated the Padres in spring training.

Swords Close in On Title

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cincinnati Swords, seeking their second straight regular-season title in the American Hockey League, moved closer to that goal Wednesday night with a 4-2 triumph over Providence Reds.

The Swords won the Western Division, now the South, in 1972-73.

Cincinnati's win left the club in fifth place, one point behind Baltimore Clippers and Hershey Bears who share first. The teams have three games remaining in the 76-game schedule which concludes Sunday.

In other games, Rochester Americans tied Richmond Robins 2-2 and Boston Braves and Hershey battled to a 3-3 draw.

Two goals a Hedberg

Americans 7 Robins 2

Serge Lajeunesse for Richmond and Ron Dantaumo for Rochester were the other scorers before 5,086 spectators in Richmond.

Braves 3 Bears 3

The Bears held a 3-0 lead early in the second period before the Braves rallied with a goal by Rob Gryp at 11:39 of the second.

Steve Stirling and Neil Claiman scored in the third period to tie the game before 6,206 fans in Hershey.

Steve Andrascik, Hank Nowak and Hugh Harvey got the Hershey goals.

New Haven is at Richmond in the only game tonight.

SEEKING NEW STADIUM

TORONTO (CP) — Leo Cahill, general manager of Toronto Northmen in the World Football League, says he has been scouting some United States cities for a possible alternative home stadium. The Canadian government has said it is drafting legislation to force the Northmen to leave Canada on grounds that competition is a threat to the Canadian Football League.

Legislation Being Prepared

Lalonde Seeks to Outlaw American Football Leagues

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation outlawing American football leagues from operating in Canada will be introduced in Ottawa between Easter, Health Minister Marc Lalonde said Wednesday.

The minister told reporters that the legislation, now in the final drafting stage, will deal only with football.

He was commenting after stating in the Commons that the legislation is forthcoming. He gave no details of its contents but said it follows the line of statements he has been making in the last few months.

The cabinet decided on the legislation last week after talks between the minister and John Bassett Jr. failed to halt the latter's plans to operate a World Football League (WFL) team in Toronto this year.

But Lalonde has said he wants to do more than stop the WFL Toronto Northmen. He wants to prevent any National Football League teams operating in the big Canadian Football League cities of Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal.

Lalonde has said he believes that the CFL, which he describes as the only wholly Canadian professional sport left, will suffer serious damage if American leagues operate in Canada.

Bert Fergus Captures Top Badminton Honors

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bert Fergus, 41-year-old elementary school vice-principal from Richmond, B.C., won the men's singles Wednesday and teamed with Abdul Shaikh of Vancouver to take the men's doubles in senior finals of the Canadian national badminton championships.

Fergus pulled a muscle in his leg as the mixed doubles final in the senior competition was postponed to today. In that event, Fergus is playing with Claire Lovett of Toronto. They will meet Shaikh and Jean Barkley of Vancouver.

Fitzsimmons Equals World Golf Record

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Pat Fitzsimmons, sinking 12 birdies and an eagle, shot 34-under-par 30 on the Salem Golf Club course, equalling a world mark for an 18-hole course of 6,000 yards or more.

Harry Weetman, a British Ryder Cup player, shot 58 on the 6,111-yard Croham Hurst course at Croydon, England, in 1956, according to the Guinness Book of Records.

"I don't suppose that it ever will happen to me again. I actually played the entire round without missing a shot," said Fitzsimmons, a newcomer to the Professional Golf Association tour.

Injured Workmen Angry

TORONTO (CP) — Labor Minister Fernand Guindon was called arrogant and irresponsible Wednesday by a delegation of injured workmen pressing for more compensation and security.

The dozen workmen, several sobbing with canes, belong to a group called The Union of Injured Workers.

Spokesman Malcolm Nicholson accused the government and the Workmen's Compensation Board of failing to meet the needs of injured workers.

The delegation demanded that injured workers be guaranteed jobs and 100-per-cent compensation for time lost plus cost-of-living increases for compensation payments.

The workers suggested that penalties for dangerous working conditions should be increased.

Mr. Guindon denied allegations that either he or the government is arrogant and irresponsible.

The minister said he is considering cost-of-living increases in the benefits but the cost factor must be considered.

Indians Challenge Board

OTTAWA (CP) — The St. Regis Indian Reserve Band Council will challenge the jurisdiction of the Canada Labor Relations Board via the Federal Court of Canada over a union attempt to gain a working contract for employees of the band.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada, a 245,000-member union representing federal public servants, has been certified by the board as the bargaining agent for about 40 employees of the Reserve near Cornwall.

But the band council has refused to bargain with the union and disregarded a board order made earlier this month to begin negotiations.

James O'Reilly, legal counsel for the band, applied to the Federal Court to have the board's order set aside.

Claude Edwards, union president, said Wednesday in a statement the alliance was told by Mr. O'Reilly and band council chief Lawrence Francis that if the court decides in favor of the union, the council will go ahead with contract negotiations.

Artists Demonstrate Techniques at Gallery

For the first time in Toronto, the Art Gallery of Ontario presents Artists with their Work, a project whereby artists travel throughout the province with exhibitions of their work to meet people and give demonstrations of their techniques.

The exhibition opened March 1 at 23 Hazelton Avenue and continues through March 30. This is the second exhibition in the Art Gallery's ongoing Art Trip 74 program at the Hazelton location.

The four artists involved, Vera Frenkel, Brian Kelley, Thomas and Martha Fleschkircon, will exhibit their work simultaneously and will each be present to give demonstrations or poetry readings at specified times.

Vera Frenkel will exhibit her Knowles Window, a room in which window images are projected, and other related works describing this artist's concern with the nature of perception.

Brian Kelley's exhibit consists of about 35 mounted prints including etchings, aquatints and linoleum block prints. The works shown represent a selective cross-section of this artist's output over the past six years.

The Organic Zucchini is the title of Martha and Thomas Hazelkirsen's presentation. From May to September, 1973, Martha and Thomas collected data on the zucchini from around the world to assemble for this exhibit. On view will be photographs, growing plants, recipes, correspondence and reports from hundreds of zucchini gardens.

Hazelton is open Tuesday to Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Guy Lombardo at Arts Centre

OTTAWA — Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians will be in the National Arts Centre Opera April 1st, at 8:30 p.m.

Lombardo has kept the world's feet dancing and toes tapping to The Sweetest Music This Side of Heaven for more than four decades. Millions of people have started the New Year every year with Lombardo and his Royal Canadians on television and radio — THOUSands more have filled concert halls.

Record buyers in their millions have made Lombardo's discs best-sellers. He is credited with having introduced more than 300 songs that became top favorites of more than any other bandleader.

Guy Lombardo has had tremendous success as a producer. His Jones Beach spectaculars, launching the record-breaking musical productions of Around the World in 80 Days, and South Pacific have been seen by huge audiences. He was the first bandleader to find a successful TV format for his Royal Canadians, and these programs are still syndicated and produced all over the world.

Players Warmly Received

SYDNEY, Australia (Reuter), — Canada's Stratford National Theatre company was praised by critics here Wednesday following its performance of Moliere's classic.

The Stratford company performance was the first drama presented in the new Opera Theatre, the smaller of the two main auditoriums in the Harbourside Cultural Centre opened in October last year.

Although critics were unhappy with the acoustics in the theatre, they were unqualified in their praise for the Stratford players interpretation of Moliere's classic.

The dean of Sydney theatre critics, H. G. Nippas, of the Sydney Morning Herald, wrote: "Mr. Jean Gaston's droll, sturdy, sensible production won golden opinions at the Adelaide festival . . . and I am sure it deserves them."

Kippas went on:

"There is Miss Tanya Moiseivitsch's autumnal set, its gold and verdigris hinting at the dust and decay into which monomaniac Argan's house is falling.

"And there is Argan himself, played by Mr. William Hutt with the robustness and vigour needed to bring his hypochondria within humanity while preserving all that is ridiculous in the character.

Centre Flourishing

OTTAWA — The Commons tabled the sixth annual report of the National Arts Centre recently and figures indicated an increase of nearly 36 per cent in performances and a continuing rise in attendance for 1972-73.

Statistics released by the Centre showed from July 1, 1972 to June 30, 1973 they have staged 524 performances compared to 719 the previous year. During that period 675,438 people paid to attend NAC presentations which played to 76.8 per cent capacity. Corresponding figures for 1971-72 were 616,334 and 76.6 per cent.

The NAC orchestra continued to draw the largest audiences, playing to nearly 90 per cent capacity while English and French theatre productions attracted 82 per cent.

In the fiscal year April 1, 1972 to March 31, 1973, the Centre's program and administration costs amounted to $7.8 million. Of this, $3.7 million was covered by government subsidy and an equal amount by ticket receipts. The Centre's reserve account made up the remaining $0.4 million.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — She admitted it was her 50th birthday Wednesday, but the fans of Sarah Vaughan's singing consider her ageless.

President Nixon congratulated her in a letter which says:

"Mrs. Nixon and I are pleased to join with your many friends, fans and admirers in paying tribute to you.

Sarah Vaughan's style has not changed for more than 20 years.

"I sing the contemporaries, and I sing the oldies," she said. "A song is a song; it's just the way you put it over."

PARIS (AP) — Gloria Swanson celebrated her 75th birthday in Paris Wednesday by watching a screen of her old movies at the French Cinematheque.

Retired from the movies since the classic Sunset Boulevard, she told a reporter, "I don't make any more movies because I can't find a script that I like.

"The violence, the cruelty, the despair of American movies in recent years makes me morally and emotionally sick."

NEW YORK (AP) — Three musicals, four plays and 34 performers were nominated Wednesday for Broadway's 1974 Tony Awards. Winners will be decided by secret ballot of about 450 representatives of the theatrical profession.

Silver medallions will be distributed in the 18 competitive categories during an ABC television show April 21.

Nominated for best musical award were Raisin, which scooped up nine citations; Seesaw, which received seven, and Over Here! with five. (Best-Play nominations went to The Au Pair Man, Boom Boom Boom, The River Niger and Ulysses in Nighttown.

DOWN AND UP

OTTAWA (CP) — The Ottawa board of education estimates a drop of 1,000 in secondary school enrolment this year. But even with the heavy decline, the 1974 budget estimates are $2.5 million above those of last year.

Doctor's Report
Cause of Worry

By C. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am a woman of 41 and seem to be in perfect health. I have been getting yearly checkups and everything has been fine.

On my last checkup I noticed on my chart under the electrocardiogram the wording "first-degree blockage." The doctor told me it was nothing to worry about and I should forget about it.

I never had any heart trouble and am very puzzled as to what first-degree blockage means.—Mrs. S.F.

The idea of a "heart block" can be very disconcerting to a layman, just from the sound of it.

Actually it is a technical term signifying an increased time for the impulse-to-beat to travel from the circle to the ventricle—that is, from an upper chamber to the lower chamber of the heart.

This can occur in either men or women without the presence of any heart disease, and without meaning there is any weakness in the heart. It is just a variation.

There are no symptoms. It is a condition which is diagnosed only by the tracing of an electrocardiogram.

What to do about it? Do exactly what your doctor advised. Forget it.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Recently my wife and I have found out that we are expecting our first child. Of course we are very happy, but at the same time, my wife is worried.

It seems that she has been talking to one of her friends (who has had several children) and has been told that if you have ever had any kind of surgery around the area of the child, that child and any other children will have to be taken by Caesarean. She had an appendectomy about three years ago.

I have tried to talk to her and reassure her, to ask her doctor, but she doesn't want to ask him such a dumb question. Being an avid reader of your column, she would believe you, and I am hoping that you will.—E.R.H.

Having had an appendectomy or any similar operation would have no bearing at all on a decision to have a Caesarean birth.

Note to A.R.: It is possible for a woman to be experiencing menopause at the age of 31, and it can be a lot younger. Not frequent—but it can happen.

Yesterday's Answer

For men must work and women must weep, and the sooner it's over, the sooner to sleep. Charles Kingsley.

CLUE: Kelly, made easily. However, Ely went to four spades and it was up to Hal Sims to lead.

Hal decided that an attack would be the best defense and chose to open his queen of diamonds.

Sly went right up with dummy's ace and played ace and jack of spades. Hal went right up with his king and led his second diamond. Dorothy won the returned a low diamond. This made it impossible for Sly to shut out Hal's nine of trumps and there was still a heart loser.

'Caisses Pops' Expand Importance in Quebec

By JOSEPH MacSWEEN

MONTREAL (CP) — A financial offspring of Canada's Co-operative Movement is stepping into the Quebec industrial and commercial scene in a new way.

The venture means a new chapter in the story of the Desjardins "caisses pops" or credit unions, which are woven deep in the fabric of Quebec life. The Mouvement Desjardins connotes humble beginnings but today it signifies a financial empire—complete with flashing computers and rising skyscrapers.

Alphonse Desjardins started one of the greatest success stories of Quebec—Canada, in fact—when he founded his first caisse populaire in 1900, thereby introducing the credit union movement to North America.

The first deposit—one thin dime—was destined to grow to assets of $4 billion in the constellation of financial ventures that now make up the Federation du Quebec des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, embracing half the population of the province. Quebec also has three smaller federations serving its French- and English-speaking members' and the movement has permeated all regions of Canada.

"I believe we are the Co-operative Movement's first near-conglomerate in the world," says Dr. Rosario Tremblay, federation director of external communications, a veteran official who has carried the "co-op" message as far away as Pakistan and French-language Africa.

Of the present orientation of the federation, Dr. Tremblay told a reporter: "We have a duty toward the community, to help the economy and create jobs, especially for the young people coming on the market."

The impact of the movement has been felt in ways small and large, however. One distinguished French-Canadian credits the quiet giant with a key role in helping Quebec weather the stormy financial waters of the Quiet Revolution.

Observers see the Complexe Desjardins, a $157-million multi-functional project rising in the heart of Montreal, as symbolizing a new image. Desjardins interests are majority owners in partnership with the provincial government in this biggest construction effort of the day.

By founding a new society for industrial and commercial investment, the federation is expanding its scope as Quebec strives for economic progress and French-speaking citizens demand a bigger role in business.

"It means that Quebecers are reaching out in a way that has not been seen before to build themselves a place in industry," said Raymond Beaugrand, director general of the newly formed Societe d'investissement Desjardins (SID).

"Personally I think SID will have an influence in the industrial field similar to that shown in the financial world by the Desjardins movement, which has been growing at 12 per cent for the last six years."

Besides SID, the federation—described as the first computerized co-op system—embraces 1,270 caisses pops from Gaspe in Abitibi, 3,000,000 members, 19 regional Desjardins unions, two life insurance companies, two general insurance companies, a trust company, an investment fund, an e-ducational institute and other holdings.

Federation President Alfred Rouleau said in a policy statement the rapid growth showed a desire for a more dynamic role by the membership, hence the SID decision.

Mr. Beaugrand reported that SID—created by the Quebec national assembly with authorized risk capital of $100 million—would make its first venture "by next fall at the latest, but it could happen within a few weeks."

SID aims to invest in new or existing enterprises primarily in the sectors of food, leisure, health, communications and transport and manufacture of construction materials. It also has a lead program.

"We outlined our areas of prime interest in a broad and fluid manner so as not to tip off the competition," said Mr. Beaugrand. 46-year-old engineer and former special projects man for the Quebec department of industry and commerce.

One-time economic counsellor at Quebec House in London, Mr. Beaugrand already has helped bring new industry to Quebec. He speaks some Japanese and German as well as English and French.

He gave a picture of a membership ready and eager to invest, with $36 million already subscribed to the fund. Some members were talking in terms of subscribing $250 million to $375 million within five years, with estimates going as high as $1 billion in 10 years.

The society was thinking at present in terms of minority participation in companies—"we want to make it possible for them to grow." It involves a loan policy in areas where investment would not be deemed appropriate.

Mr. Beaugrand said SID hopes to develop the industrial management tradition now lacking in French Quebec life and attract French-Canadian executives from large corporations.

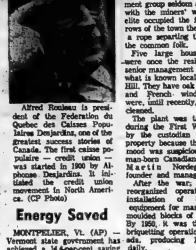
SID will play by the rules of the industrial game, yet represents an extension into the commercial and industrial fields of the Desjardins philosophy.

Mr. Beaugrand said he feels English-Canadians often misunderstand the aspirations of French-Canadians to attain control of their own economic destiny.

"A nation or a society cannot survive unless it has such control," he declared. "English Canada is worried today about American ownership. But for a long time French-Canadians have worried in the same way about English-Canadians as well as Americans.

The Desjardins movement—and SID—hoped to respond to the real needs of individuals and the Quebec "collectivity" without hostility or prejudice to others. This was a founding principle of the movement.

How did it all begin?



Alphonse Desjardins, Hansard-type parliamentary reporter at the House of Commons, had corresponded with British and German pioneers in credit and savings societies before opening his first caisse populaire. He felt that the financial institutions of the day blocked the economic liberation of ordinary folk.

"The genius of Desjardins was that he married in one co-operative institution the two functions of credit—and savings and came up with something entirely new," said Rosario Tremblay.

The first deposit was 10 cents. Alphonse and his wife raised up a total of $26.46 from their first day's business Dec. 6, 1900, at their home in Levis, across the St. Lawrence River from Quebec City.

Today the assets bulk on 1,338 caisses pops and credit unions in Quebec are estimated at $4.4 billion and membership at 3.9 million men, women and children out of a total population of six million.

The all-Canadian membership is climbing toward one-third of the whole population, says the Toronto headquarters of the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions. The NACCU estimated total assets of more than $3.5 billion for 6.7 million members at the end of 1973.

Alfred Rouleau is president of the Federation du Quebec des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, one of the greatest success stories of Canada. The first caisse populaire or credit union was started in 1900 by Alphonse Desjardins. It initiated the credit union movement in North America. (CP Photo)

Energy Saved

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Vermont state government has achieved a 14-per-cent saving in electricity use since the start of an energy conservation program last summer, the governor says. Gov. Thomas P. Salmon said that during the 10-month period from May, 1973, to February, 1974, the state used 500,000 kilowatt hours less electricity than during the same period the year before.

Coal-mining Town May Enjoy Revival

NORDEGG, Alta., (CP) — The rotting houses and abandoned mine shafts of this town smuggled in the high foothills are ghostly reminders of the past glory of the coal-mining age.

At the peak of the mining town's life, here were 3,500 residents and 700 houses. About 1,100 workmen were on the payroll of Brazeau Collieries Ltd. before it shut down operations in 1953.

Today, Nordegg is home for 125 persons and the involuntary residents of a provincial prison camp. But a Red Deer coal company is studying a strip-mining operation that might restore the town to a shade of its romantic past.

Brazeau Collieries delivered its first coal shipment in 1914, the beginning of the boom period for Nordegg. The pioneer town had its own casts system with social life divided between management and the miners.

Women from the management group seldom associated with the miners' wives. The elite occupied the first three rows of the town site, perched on a rope separating them from the common folk.

Five large houses which were once the residences of senior management of Canada's first coal mining town. Nordegg, named after its founder and manager.

After the war, the mine reorganized operations with installation of briquetting equipment for manufacturing moulded blocks of coal dust. In 1950, it was the largest briquetting operation in Canada, producing 1,500 tons daily.

Disaster twice struck the town.

An explosion ripped through the mine shaft in 1941, killing 31 miners. In 1950, fire destroyed operations but the mine reopened following a $1.5-million rebuilding program that lasted 18 months.

Modern technology gradually overtook Nordegg and the need for the town disappeared as diesel engines replaced coal burning steam locomotives.

When the mine closed in 1955, long-time residents moved to other Alberta mining towns and the old town and its mining plant were fenced off and guarded by watchmen against looters.

The town was forgotten until 1963 when a $100,000 facelift of some old mining buildings turned it into a minimum-security prison used as a base for forestry projects.

A new hamlet, mostly inhabited by prison staff and provincial government employees, has grown outside the old town and prison camp and residents are rarefully watching plans for the strip-mining operation.

Exploration crews have been examining coal reserves in the area for two years. Japan would be the primary buyer.

At an earlier point in its history, a new mining development would have been warmly welcomed. But some residents, enjoying the rural quiet, are concerned about the effects of mining.

A consulting firm is conducting environmental studies that may hold the key to whether coal will once again rule Nordegg.

Tax Tips

Pension Payments Taxable

If you live in a toll area, ask your long-distance operator for ZENITH 6-8000 and your call will be placed without charge.

Q. I am now receiving pension payments from the Canada Pension Plan. Is the money I receive taxable, and should I include it when I report my income?

A. Yes, the income you are now receiving from the Canada Pension Plan is taxable and should be reported on your income tax return.

Q. My wife and I were married in September. She was has not worked since. Can I claim the full married exemption of $1,600 for her? What does she do about filling a return?

A. If she received no income after your marriage, you may claim the full married exemption of $1,600. Otherwise, calculate your exemption taking into account only the income she received after your marriage. If your wife is taxable on her tax deducted from her salary, she must file her own return.

Q. My nephew, aged 15, came to live with me last year when his parents were killed in an auto accident. Although I have not been appointed as his legal guardian, and no papers have been signed, he is totally dependent on me. Can I claim him as a dependant on my income tax form?

A. Yes. The fact that you have not been appointed his legal guardian would not bar you from claiming your nephew as a dependant if he otherwise qualified.

Q. Last year my wife and I decided to assist a child who lives in another country. We send regular payments for this child to receive food, clothing and education under a foster parents plan. We have not adopted this youngster, but I am wondering if I claim the child as a dependant on my income tax return, or claim the money I send to her as a charitable donation?

A. You may not claim the child as a dependant as you did not have custody or control over the youngster However, payments made in the year to the Foster Parents Plan of Canada are eligible for deduction as charitable donations when supported by proper receipts.

Q. We had a baby last year who only lived a few hours. Can we make any tax claim for her?

A. Yes. If a child is born in the year and lives, you may claim the child as a dependant for a $300 exemption.

Q. I have been claiming my children as exemptions on my tax return. Can my wife claim the medical expenses I paid on their behalf, on her tax return?

A. Medical expenses can be allowed only to the person who claims the dependant for the year when the expense was incurred.

Q. As an employer, I made the proper deductions for income tax, Canada Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance, but I misplaced my remittance form PD7A. How should I make my remittance for the deductions?

A. Your remittance should be forwarded to the Taxation Data Centre, Ottawa, with your employer's number outlining the pay period covered and the breakdown of the applicable deductions.

Solves Problem

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Foreigners caught streaking in Kenya will be deported in the nude, Vice-President Daniel Moi said Wednesday. Last weekend, Europeans streaked twice in public places in the country.

Moi said that in future any streaker will be arrested in the nude and put on the first available aircraft to his country of origin.

Women Nigeria's Biggest Smugglers

LAGOS (Reuter) — Women lead the way in big-time smuggling in Nigeria, says the customs and excise board here.

Every year assorted goods worth $12 million are smuggled into the country, mostly across the frontiers with Dahomey, Niger and Cameroun.

They include items like cigarettes, spirits, tomato puree, polished rice and the expensive textiles which sophisticated Nigerians prefer to home-made yams.

Currency smuggling is also popular because of Nigeria's strict currency regulations. Smugglers have been caught with loaves of bread and bowls of rice stuffed with Nigerian bank notes.

And the leading smugglers are women.

Officially women smugglers are classified into three groups according to the volume of their business and the degree of influence they wield.

The most powerful group operates international syndicates specializing in jewelry and drugs.

Some rings have been broken and several smugglers are serving sentences abroad for trafficking in marijuana.

The second group of women smugglers, who operate mostly in West Africa, are less influential but equally enterprising.

The third smuggling category are receivers. They have a fast and efficient system of disposing of contraband.

Smuggling in Nigeria reached its peak during the 1967-70 civil war when imports were restricted. But officials say the situation has changed for the better with the introduction of more liberal tariffs and the lifting of the trade embargo.

Smuggling is not the exclusive preserve of women. Men also take part—they are said to form the hard core of workers employed by women. The men ferry contraband consignments across the waterways and drive getaway vehicles.

Security officers of the customs and excise board have stepped up their patrols to catch smugglers.

Lang Plans Action

Changes Will Come In Grain Haulage

ESTEVAN, Sask. (CP) — Justice Minister Otto Lang said Friday night the federal government will put more than $180 million worth of additional grain-carrying railway cars into the transport system.

But he told farmers to prepare for "fundamental changes" in the system, indicating they may have to haul their grain to more-distant delivery points.

He also estimated that up to 1,000 grain elevators will be temporarily tilted out of use as a short-term measure to unravel the current snarl in grain movement.

Mr. Lang, minister responsible for the Canadian wheat board, said in an interview the temporary closures would affect a quarter of the grain-producing area, leaving the railways free to concentrate on lines that are not blocked by snow or likely to be hit by spring floods.

But even after the water and snow are gone, he said, the lines may be long closed for "a good bit longer" so that the maximum grain can be moved.

Mr. Lang told a farmers' dinner the government will "buy another 4,000 hopper cars to assure that the grain can move in Canada in the kind of equipment in which it really ought to move."

"We're going to buy those cars now. We're not going to try to wait first to settle the question of who really should in the end be paying for them, although that question is still open."

In interviews, he said the delivery date for the hopper cars—whose price tag he put at $100 million to $125 million—cannot be estimated because of the heavy work schedule faced by railcar manufacturers.

But he said the new cars will not come soon enough to help solve the short-term transport problems that were aggravated by last summer's rail strike and heavy snowfalls.

He expressed optimism that the short-term problems will be solved quickly since all parties involved now are co-operating.

Taking some lines out of service is not the first step toward abandonment of those lines, Mr. Lang said.

To the contrary, the government will press the railways to upgrade more lines to carry the weight—263,000 pounds loaded—of the hopper cars.

The government purchased 2,500 hopper cars last summer.

Mr. Lang stressed the need for long-term measures and said the 4,000 new hopper cars are not enough.

Production and transportation systems have to be expanded to handle a billion bushels of grain for export a year, compared with the 750-million-bushel target set by the wheat board for this year and the 830 million bushels moved last year.

Railways have argued on grounds of efficiency for more-car-railed delivery points, perhaps with commercial truckers bringing grain in from smaller elevators.

"A good bit of grain in future years is going to have to move a lot farther by truck," Mr. Lang said in an interview, adding that millions of dollars should not be wasted on facilities that handle small volumes.

"If we have a bad system of subsidy grain that costs us $20 or $30 or $100 million more than it ought to, that is $20 or $30 or $100 million that you could have with a different system," he told the farmers.

Mr. Lang said a special government railway committee is studying the whole problem and should make recommendations in four to six months.

Eight Charged In Kent Deaths

CLEVELAND (AP) — A federal grand jury indicted one present and seven former members of the Ohio National Guard on Friday on charges they violated the civil rights of four students killed and nine wounded in the 1970 shootings at Kent State.

The indictment was returned after a 39-day investigation and three days of secret deliberations. The document was turned over to a federal judge here and its contents were announced by the justice department in Washington.

The defendants were charged with wilfully assaulting and intimidating demonstrators on the Kent State campus on May 4, 1970, by firing in their direction and violating their constitutional rights.

The maximum penalty upon conviction is one-year imprisonment and a $1,000 fine but when death results from the action, any number of years in prison up to life.

The indictment said all the defendants at the time of the shootings were members of the Ohio National Guard.

U.S. District Judge Frank Battisti was presented with the document after the jurors met briefly with federal prosecutors.

Blakeney Cuts Gas Tax To Offset Price Boost

REGINA (CP) — Premier Allan Blakeney announced Friday a seven-cent-a-gallon cut in provincial gasoline taxes to shelter Saskatchewan consumers from coming price increases.

Mr. Blakeney told the legislature that effective May 15 the provincial tax on gasoline would drop to 12 cents a gallon from 19 cents.

At the same time, the tax on diesel fuel would be cut to 16 cents a gallon from 21.

For farmers, who enjoy no provincial taxes on gasoline used for agricultural purposes, there would be a subsidy of up to seven cents a gallon to protect them from price increases.

Mr. Blakeney said the May 15 date, which also applies to the farm subsidies, was chosen because that is the date at which crude oil price increases are expected to have their effect on fuel prices.

Lewis Wants Help to Offset Rent Increases

TORONTO (CP) — Stephen Lewis, leader of the New Democratic Party, called on the government Friday to give massive financial relief to recipients of social assistance to compensate for an extraordinary increase in rent in the last year.

He made reference to a report from the Metro Toronto Social Planning Council which described the consequences of rent increases as "catastrophic."

Mr. Lewis said the government should make several millions of dollars available in the form of rent subsidy.

Rene Brunelle, minister of community and social services, said his ministry was aware of the problem caused by rising rent and noted that food and rental costs were raised last January.

A major problem, he said, was that when the government increases shelter allowances to those getting social allowances, the landlords often raise the rent.

Nixon Said Owing Income Tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional staffers have concluded that U.S. President Nixon owes substantially more than the $878,651 tax he paid during his first term, sources close to the inquiry say.

The sources also say Nixon has decided against paying additional tax voluntarily. Such a suggestion was made by Representative Wilbur Mills (Dem., Ark.), vice-chairman of the joint committee on internal revenue taxation, which is looking into the president's taxes.

Instead, White House lawyers have asked to argue the president's case before the committee, a request expected to be granted, the sources say.

The staff anticipates submitting its report on Nixon's taxes for the years 1969 through 1973 to the committee within a week. The president had income totalling more than $1 million during those years.

75 Per Cent Gains Tax On Land Profits Urged

TORONTO (CP) — A stiff capital gains tax to put a stop to speculative buying of land and housing was proposed Friday in the legislature by Michael Cassidy (NDP—Ottawa Centre).

Mr. Cassidy said during throne speech debate that Ontario should impose a 75-per-cent capital gains tax on anyone who buys and sells land or houses for profit rather than his own use.

He said the tax should be retroactive to October, 1971, the date of the last provincial election.

"That means if the land has been in one hand over that period of time, and is sold, the government would pay a speculative gains tax of 75 per cent," he said.

"If the owner happened to have so bought the land recently, at a very inflated price, he would find that, in fact, he couldn't afford to do it. People who play that sort of game deserve to get caught."

He said the only way an owner could avoid paying the heavy tax would be to sell his land or house to the government at about the price he paid for it.

Looting and Typhoid Feared In Brazilian Flooded Areas

TUBARAO, Brazil (AP) — Soldiers patrolled for looting and doctors watched for possible typhoid outbreaks as this costal city began assessing its losses from devastating floods that have swept nine Brazilian states.

There were no official nationwide estimates of the death toll, but the mayor of Tubarao said as many as 1,000 were dead in his city alone. Civil defence officials gave the known toll as 42.

Reuters news agency said an Interior ministry spokesman put the number of dead at between 2,000 and 5,000).

Newspapers estimated nationwide damage to crops and livestock all up to 1 500 million. Thousands were left homeless.

Tubarao, a city of 100,000 in southern Santa Catarina, province, suffered most damage than any other area in the two weeks of torrential rains that loosened mud and swelled rivers from northwest Brazil to the southern coast. The city is 600 miles south of Rio de Janeiro.

The rains stopped Friday and authorities were confident the flooding was over in most of the country. But panic was reported in Pernambuco in the northeastern Brazilian state of Ceara, where a dam broke and sent water cascading into the centre of town. Twenty thousand residents were left homeless.

In Tubarao, Mayor Ernesto Feuerschuetze ordered mass inoculations against typhoid fever and said the disease may reach the end of its incubation period and break out this week-end.

"The only drinking water in the city was from the muddy Tubarao River, and officials feared it had been contaminated by the carcasses of drowned cattle and sewage from broken pipes. Feuerschuetze estimated that about 15,000 cattle were killed.

A special military command was set up to enforce a curfew from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m.

"We had a lot of shooting during the night by the patrols," the mayor said, but he did not say whether any looters were hit.

Air Force on Display

Base Celebrating Birthday

By STEVE CAMPBELL
Staff Correspondent

TRENTON — CFB Trenton celebrated the 50th anniversary of the Royal Canadian Air Force Friday night in Hangar 5. A large crowd of servicemen and civilians gathered for the night of entertainment.

Trenton Sing Out opened the evening with a set of singing and dancing. Though hampered by the poor acoustics in the hangar, the group of 60 young people evoked audience participation and presented a special rendition of "Come Josephine in my Flying Machine" and "Coming In on a Wing and a Prayer".

Commemorative displays in the hangar illustrated the background and achievements of the RCAF. A cake of 18 candels of honor and a cake devoted to six RCAF members who excelled in valor and devotion to duty.

Battle Honors recalled the RCAF involvement from 1939 to 1945, in the Battle of Britain, the defence of Britain and roles in France, Germany, Italy, Egypt and Libya.

Brigadier-General Bert Allison and Private Bob Naull cut the large cake decorated with the RCAF insignia. Brigadier-General Allison, Chief of Staff at CFB Trenton, has been in the service for 33 years; Private Naull is the youngest serviceman at 17 with seven months in the service.

Member of Parliament George Hees was an honored guest at the event which was the first of several on the agenda for the weekend.

The two servicemen at CFB Trenton who represent the longest and the shortest terms in the service join in the ceremonial cutting of the cake to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Royal Canadian Air Force Friday night. Brigadier-General Bert Allison, Chief of Staff at CFB Trenton with 33 years in the service shared the honor with 17-year-old Private Bob Naull who has spent seven months in the service. General Allison spoke briefly on the RCAF and Private Naull delivered a short speech in his native French.

Quinte District Becomes Giant-sized Skating Rink

By PETER GOODSPEED
Staff Reporter

The Quinte district became one big skating rink early today as a combination of rain and freezing temperatures glazed town and country with a treacherous coating of ice.

Personal travel was cut to a minimum and police called for drivers to remain off streets and highways, as they were plagued by a rash of minor and out so minor traffic accidents.

Weathermen at Canadian Forces Base Trenton said the freezing rain started to fall in the Belleville area just after midnight as temperatures dropped to a low of 28 degrees.

By 9 a.m. a total of .05 inches of freezing rain had fallen in the Belleville area.

Provincial highways crews in the Belleville - Marysville area began sanding and salting main traffic routes at 1:30 a.m., and worked throughout the night.

The busiest people by far, however, were the officers at the Belleville detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police.

At 9 a.m., a police spokesman said that nearly half of the detachments midnight to dawn shift were still out investigating traffic accidents in the area.

The most serious accident reported to police was a two truck collision on Highway 401, near the Aitken Side Road.

Two transport trucks, driven by Boris Podwmow, of Quebec, and George Alfred Topsell, of St. Thomas, collided around 5:20 a.m. and police worked until nearly 8:30 a.m. to clear the roadway.

An accident report is not yet available on the incident but no injuries were reported.

Two minor accidents were reported along Highway 2 near Marysville between 7 a.m. and 8 a.m.

At 7 a.m. a half-ton truck, driven by Lee Roland Sievert, of RR2, Shannonville spun out of control on the ice and turned over on its side half a mile east of the Catholic Church in Marysville.

An hour and ten minutes later, a car driven by Eric Vani, of Farley Ave., Belleville, slipped on the ice and went into the ditch, bumping into a hydro pole, in approximately the same area. No injuries were reported and damage was said to be minor.

A minor rear-end collision was reported to have occurred at the stop lights on Highway 2, near the GRD road around 8:30 a.m. but damage was said to be negligible and there were no injuries.

A car truck collision in the east bound lane of Highway 401, just west of the Shannonville Gravel Rd., caused an estimated $300 damage around 7 a.m. this morning.

PC Tom Bergeron, of the OPP, said that a car driven by Gordon Sutherland, 24, of Burlington, spun around, while passing a truck, and was hit in the front end by a tractor trailer driven by Valerio Medori, of LaSalle, Quebec.

Mrs. Rose Sutherland, 18, received a minor cut on her neck as a result of the accident, but did not require any medical attention.

A little while later, PC Bergstrom investigated a single car accident on Highway 401, near the Glen Miller Road.

A car driven by Antonio Ferreria, 43, of Toronto, spun out of control on some ice in the west bound lane and crossed a ditch on the north side of the road before it came to rest in a field.

Mr. Ferreria complained of back injuries and is being treated at Trenton Memorial Hospital.

Damage to the car's body was estimated at $300 while the car's undercarriage was said to have suffered considerable damage.

Belleville OPP officers are also investigating an accident on Highway 401, near the St. Hilaire Rd. No reports are available on this incident.

Belleville police were lucky. They didn't have a single accident reported to them between 12 a.m. and 9:45 a.m.

The freezing rain was expected to continue falling until noon hour, when it was to turn to rain as temperatures climbed to 35 degrees.

The low tonight is expected to be 32 degrees and Sunday's forecast calls for cloudy periods and snowflurries.

Just Who Are Principals?

By LENNY WILLIAMSON

As teachers' federations draw closer to a labor stance, principals are finding themselves cast into limbo.

Just who and what are principals?

They are still safely ensconced as members of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation. After all, it was principals who started the federation in 1922, meeting in shuttered quarters by candlelight so that their organizational activities wouldn't be observed.

Their thanks is scepticism, and an element of distrust from rank and file members.

Because of the autonomy granted them by their bosses, principals in the 1970s are closer to the management team than to the classroom teachers they supervise.

The result is a growing barrier between teachers and the principal teacher in school, or, as the quaint English terminology they affect would have it, the "head master."

Moves have been afoot at the last two OSSTF annual assemblies to turf out the headmasters. But moderate majority has successfully resisted the campaign.

To a labor-oriented public, the distinction is clear. Principals, or headmasters, are management. Some trustees and administrators share the view. Most don't.

To the members of their staffs, most principals are just that, the first, or top teacher among them all, individuals who have come up from the ranks.

The York teachers' strike in January brought things to a head. Most York teachers walked out. None of their headmasters did. The teachers claimed it was because York's administration had granted headmasters a big salary increase in the fall. The headmasters claimed it was because of their devotion to students and education, and they got a kick in for responsibility for good measure.

Who knows?

Teacher-moderates want to retain headmasters in the Federation for the benefit of their experience. The radicals want them out. The principals appear to want to stay in.

At one time, most of the OSSTF presidents were headmasters.

The last to hold the position two years ago was Darryl Hodgins. He is probably the last headmaster to hold high elective office in the federation, say teachers.

Until the teacher situation stabilizes, and the dic is cast for a union or a professional association, the headmasters will hold an ambiguous position.

One thing is certain — it will be slomg time before headmasters again take over top executive positions in the secondary teachers' federation.

Prince Edward Has A "Ghost Town"

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

DEMORESTVILLE

Prince Edward's "ghost town", Demorestville, once rivalled Picton in size and prosperity.

In the early 1800s the village was awarded the second largest settlement west of Kingston — the largest being Bath.

This thriving community, located about nine miles northwest of Hallowell, boasted two millinery shops, two tailor shops, two blacksmith shops, four taverns, six general stores, three brickmakers and three churches.

A lumberman's town Demorestville was named for settler Guillaume Demorest who crossed the Bay of Quinte from Adolphustown to make his home in 1793.

He had briefly been a school teacher in Adolphustown before coming to Sophiasburgh township where he purchased two lots for a home for himself and his bride, Jane Davis.

Demorest reportedly recognized the industrial potential of the local waterfall. Soon after, he settled there a grist mill, a saw mill and an ashery were built and agricultural implements manufactured.

The wilderness town continued its boom and a tannery, a carding and pulling mill, a cabinet factory and a carriage factory sprang up. There was also a bakeshop and a large Cooper age mill.

Notes copied from historical records by Mrs. David Bulpit of Demorestville state that, in the early 1800s, there were a number of scattered Mohawk Indian tribes. Four braves used to arrive nightly in the village to sleep on the floor of a house owned by Mrs. Samuel Barton. Although the other white women remained frightened of the Indians she gave them food and shelter and was called "Little White Mother" by the wayfarers.

The village also sheltered soldiers during the war of 1812. From 1812 to 1815, according to Mrs. Bulpit's records, 570 soldiers camped on the land that later became the Demorestville fairgrounds.

There are reports that the village was nicknamed "Sodom" because of the boisterous behavior of the bivouacked militia. Other histories state that the name originated with Demorest's wife, Jane, on the night of her death. The dying woman supposedly heard laughter, shouts and music from a ballroom breaking through the boarded-up window. She is reputed to have commented in anger that the community's residents were "as bad as the inhabitants of Sodom."

Proof of the riotous conduct of the residents is evidenced in 1832 with the formation of the Demorestville and Sophiasburgh Temperance Society.

Demorestville was not without culture despite the alleged rowdyism of its early days. The village boasted having the finest brass band between Kingston and Toronto. In 1860 the band travelled on the steamer to a welcoming celebration in honor of the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII.

Thomas Barton an artistic local waggoner painted in his spare hours. His portraits included "Sultanna", a work that won high praise from the famous Pioneer Life in the Bay of Quinte.

Religion played a role in the life of Demorestville's settlers. The first residents of the village worshipped in the kitchen of Guillaume Demorest led by the pioneer. Their first minister was Thomas Maddon, who delivered his sermons in the mill built by Demorest.

Eventually, there were three churches. Wesleyan Methodist, Episcopal Methodist and Presbyterian. The Episcopal and Wesleyan Methodist churches later united. As the community grew there was also healing for the body.

Village residents in the early 1800s received medical attention from an itinerant doctor who rode on a circuit from Trent to Cataraqui. In 1833, Demorestville's first physician Dr. Moore, settled in the community and his office, now a bedroom in a private residence, still exists.

A progressive centre, Demorestville had its own newspaper, The Cricketer, and an agency for the Montreal Telegraph. The village was surveyed and had boardwalk streets named, including Jane Street, Church Street, Broadway Street, and Water Street.

The canny, fast-paced little town that had risen so swiftly to prominence in Prince Edward began to fade even before its founder's death.

At Demorest's death in Concession 1 in 1840 at the age of 91, Demorestville already had been prosperous for 29 years. By 1851 the bubble had burst and the Danforth Road became more prominently used than the route from Consecon to Wessel's Ferry, through Demorestville.

The village did not boast a harbor and was situated some four miles from a suitable location for such a facility. This was too far from the lake shipping that was proving so importance.

Demorestville lacked railway connections and was not on the main highways from Kingston to Toronto.

The community shrivelled as though its life had been contingent with the demands and ambitions of Guillaume Demorest. The taverns closed, and the agricultural fairs, once famed for their horse racing, stopped.

Today, Demorestville is a small cluster of buildings marked by a church, a township hall and a general store. There is nothing in its quietness to suggest that it was once a boom town. All that remains of the dream is the name, Demorestville, to honor a pioneer with infectious faith in a future that failed his village.

Ellis: Bancroft Uranium Sooner?

By HARRY MILHALL
Staff Reporter

Jack Ellis, MP Hastings, believes uranium mining in the Bancroft area could return earlier than originally anticipated, conceivably within three years.

Prompting his optimism, Mr. Ellis said from Ottawa Friday night, is a number of world market situations stimulated by the energy crunch.

Current trends have thrown the switch on earlier forecasts on the market future for Canadian uranium, he said.

He bases his assumption on a letter received Thursday from Energy Minister Donald Macdonald.

Mr. Macdonald quoted a study published last August by international economic and scientific agencies which forecast world demand would exceed supply in the early 1980s.

The study was produced by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the International Energy Agency Association.

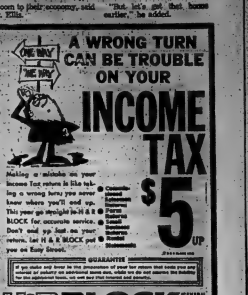
But, Mr. Macdonald wrote Mr. Ellis: "Since this report was issued many countries are declaring as the means of maintaining security of energy supplies . . . several have announced plans to accelerate their nuclear programs.

"In addition, some utilities, to secure uranium supplies, have accelerated purchases . . . for stockpiling in anticipation of demand.

"This demand, in the short term, may even be greater than earlier predicted."

Added to these factors are indications that other countries with unmined resources such as Australia — may not be able to realize predicted production volumes over the short haul.

The combination of accelerating demand and slower world production could hasten re-opening of uranium resources near Bancroft in five years.



But, says Mr. Ellis, who has been eyeing the Bancroft potential from Ottawa since the world energy problem mushroomed late last year, Hastings uranium resources may be needed even before that time.

"They've got to be opened well before the end of the decade if supplies are needed earlier than has been predicted. We can't wait until it's too late as we did in the past with fossil fuels."

It's possible positive action to re-open uranium mines closed in the late 1950s could come in "two or three years".

Bancroft area residents view the district's uranium potential more as bonus than a boom to their economy, said Mr. Ellis.

"But, let's get that home earlier," he added.

Is the "Drinking Dollar" Only Way of Finding Funds?

By MARGARET HAYLOCK

PICTON — The Prince Edward Centre Commission has turned to the "drinking dollar" in an effort to meet expenditures at Picton's arena.

At a meeting of town council this month Councillor Robert Ingerfield objected to a grant of $1,500 to the commission because the arena operates a bar.

"That's not what the commission was formed for," he commented.

"I don't think the arena should get into that area; it was not built for that purpose.

He was supported by Councillor Russell Alexander who stated: "I still think liquor has no place in an arena or community centre with the number of children that are down there."

Neither councillor voted for council's $1,500 grant to the commission.

If the drinking dollar is vital to the arena's financial report perhaps it is time for the commission to review the role of the County Centre in the community.

Is it a dance hall and bar for grownups, with a rink on the ground floor or does it function as a family centre where winter sport can be enjoyed without fear of stepping through the wrong door?

When dances are held at the centre during the week often hockey or skating are in progress below on the ice. Youngsters can look up from the ice and observe the adults drinking through the upstairs spectator windows.

As one councillor pointed out, the youngsters know what is happening on the dance floor. This awareness of an upstairs bar deprives the arena of the freedom and openness of a public centre. There must be closed doors and curtained windows if the building is to entertain grownups and children at the same time.

A bar in itself is certainly not a disgraceful or disgusting thing but it has no compatibility with a community centre's activities.

If the centre commission feels that a bar must be opened to rent the arena hall for weekend dances, then these dances should be held only in the summer months when there are no regularly scheduled activities in the building.

An imaginative centre commission might attempt to meet the problem of insufficient funds through wiser means than a weekend bar.

Several Prince Edward County organizations annually raise funds through events held in the County Centre, there is the Kiwanis Spring Auction, the Kinsmen Beer Fest and the Kiwanis Spring Revue. The County Centre service clubs pay a rental fee for the centre but retain the entire share of the profits from their projects.

Why is the Centre Commission content to function as a public mart? Instead, it might become actively involved in promotion of one or two annual events of its own to help the centre money. In this way the commission would be eligible for all of the gate receipts, not just a rental fee.

Each fall, in recent years, automobile dealers have displayed their machines at a small sports show in the arena. Perhaps the commission could expand on this by directly promoting a full scale trade fair featuring local industries such as Hallmaster Boats and Wickes Canada Ltd.

If County Centre should be as its name implies, a community gathering place, not a bar in disguise. If the drinking dollar is so urgently needed to support the arena it will be difficult for the end to justify the means.

Red Cross Activities Growing

Kits for Vietnam children are being prepared. Each package, among other things, contains soap, a toothbrush, a facecloth and a letter with expressions of goodwill.

Members are enthusiastic about the Community Involvement Program for senior secondary school students, sponsored by the Hastings County Board of Education.

The student does practical work for an agency for part of each school day.

Belleville's secondary school students were commended for their blood donations in 1973.

Wollaston Seeks "Standby" Rep

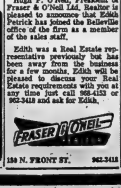
Wollaston township wants the municipal act changed to provide for another member of council to sit in at council when the reeve or deputy-reeve are unable to attend.

A resolution to this end was presented at Thursday's meeting of the county body but was referred to the county municipal reform committee for consideration.

Wollaston deputy-reeve Buddy French said a municipality should be allowed to send another member to county council meetings when regular members were unable to attend. This was necessary, he said, in order that information be brought back to the local municipality.

Reeve Barbara Allen noted that this was not allowed under the Municipal Act, but said there was nothing to prevent another member attending county meetings. The only restriction would be that such a member would not have a vote or be permitted to enter in discussions.

County to Pay Care Centre



The Hastings County social services department will take over operation of the day care centre in Trenton which until now has been run on a federal Local Initiatives Program grant.

Thursday, county council authorized steps be taken for rental, staffing and operation of the centre.

All costs associated will be chargeable to the town of Trenton, although the municipality, through the county social service department, can make application for government grants and subsidies.

The centre's LIP grant was not renewed this year.

A similar situation to the new Trenton set-up exists in Belleville where the county social services department operates a day care centre in the city.

Speed Factor

Dr. John Stock's proposal for a 25 mph speed limit on all non-arterial roads in the city has merit.

But we question whether his suggestion, stemming from what he describes as the number of traffic deaths in recent months, should be limited to the non-arterial routes.

Consider the record from Belleville city police files. Last year there were six fatal motor vehicle collisions resulting in the death of seven persons. In 1973 four persons died.

Of the seven who died in 1973 the first was an elderly woman who stepped in front of a northbound vehicle on North Front Street at Harvey Street on March 11. This was followed on March 22 by the death of a 16-year-old boy and a 14-year-old girl who were struck by a southbound vehicle as they walked on Sidney Street north of College. On April 23 a 49-year-old woman was killed when her car struck a tree at Foster and Pine. Then on August 10 a five-year-old girl was killed by a northbound vehicle when she ran across North Front Street at Valleyview Crescent. On October 13 a 46-year-old man lost his life when his car struck a pedestrian at Dundas Street East near the CPR tracks. Finally on December 19 a 42-year-old man died when his northbound vehicle was in collision with an eastbound CPR train on Pinnacle Street.

This year there has been one fatality thus far: a young girl who was killed when struck by a vehicle in the vicinity of Tracey Street.

If there is to be any reduction of the speed limit it is clear the main arteries are as much in issue, in fact more so, than any secondary route. The danger on the main routes such as North Front is apparent to anyone who drives on them, especially where cars are turning into driveways or side roads are concerned, and where the slightest inattention on the part of a driver can prove fatal. A reduction of speed on these arteries would certainly not come amiss, and if it includes all arteries so much the better.

Council is expected to consider Dr. Stock's proposal on Monday. We urge members to pay close attention to the factors involved in the above fatality record and to vote unanimously in favor of a reduction in the speed limit as proposed.

Prophetic

Alice Munro is a Canadian writer who won the Governor-General's award for her book of short stories, Dance of the Happy Shades, published in 1968.

Her first novel, Lives of Girls and Women, published, in 1971, and set against a background of family life and growing up in Ontario, has been widely acclaimed.

Mrs. Munro, who now lives in Victoria, B.C. was strangely prophetic when she wrote this book (available incidentally in a paperback edition) before the current wave of kidnappings, or attempts at same, gathered momentum.

She is describing an incident in which an elder female cousin is teasing and tickling the heroine, Del, who expresses herself "as much overcome by amazement, each time, at by her unpredictable strength and unfair tricks . . .

And then this: "I was amazed as people must be who are seized and kidnapped, and who realize both in the strange world of their captors they have a value absolutely unconnected with anything they know about themselves."

Patricia Hearst will have gone through this kind of trauma and emerge — as everyone hopes she does safely — with some sort of new outlook on people and the world that will bear little resemblance to her previous experience.

Inflation: Diefenbaker Casts P.M. In Role Of "Streaker"

By RICHARD JACKSON

OTTAWA — Going on 79 now Dief is not just getting older, he is getting better — and looking and acting as if he could go on forever.

After all, the former Prime Minister and Conservative Leader has had a lot of practice — more than any other MP — across 36 years of it.

But you would scarcely expect the Dean of the House to be first off the Commons mark in putting the newest and possibly ersatziest fad on the parliamentary record.

Streaking.

He recalled, with quotations from the record, what the Prime Minister only three years ago boasted.

To wit:

"I'm a veteran from the statistics the fight against inflation has been going. Our government's anti-inflation fight has been unequalled by any country in the western world."

Then, just the other night in Toronto the Prime Minister had changed his tune.

Inflation was far from beaten, it turned out.

So now, said the Prime Minister, the government has to deal even more vigorously with the twin economic evil, unemployment and inflation. There is a delicate balance between (them) and we have to be careful not to set off another round of inflation."

It was over the solar, with a fine sense of timing, looked around and paused while the House yelled.

"The Prime Minister," he snorted in laughter, "streaks a green deal.

"There's a new thing, they tell me.

It's called streaking.

"Last night the Prime Minister streaked."

He appeared with all his garments of expectation, hope and political promise removed."

Then, having called down the attention of the Commons with his reference to Prime Minister Trudeau as the political streaker of the day, Dief dressed him in the garments of guilt for inflation.

Heart of the problem, he said, was "the overexpenditure" of the government.

"Never were there," he said, "any three governments together which spent so riotously as they."

"For flowers and plants in Ottawa government offices, $385,000 in a year, with another $100,000 to water- and trim them.

"Prime Ministers must have holidays. But this Prime Minister has had more holidays than all Prime Ministers since 1867.

"You doubt it Look up the record.

"However none has in fact been like the holiday he had in Switzerland. I saw a picture of him on a bobsleigh built for two.

"It was the first time in a year and a half he was known by himself and did not have to turn to the David-(Lewis) which way do we go today?

Having been first onto the parliamentary record with streaking, and with the Prime Minister as the streaker, Dief then came through with a mint new and strange new political cross-breed in the Commons, the mutation of Liberal-New Democrat.

"Libracrats," he called them.

The Prime Minister, went on Dief, out of the wild left government's first streaker, but its Member. One Big Spender, spending the nation into inflation.

"He even King Farouk spent in the style of the Prime Minister's Sussex Drive (the official residence) and Harrington Lake his country place in the Gatineau Hills. Waste, waste, waste in the spending of thousands of dollars. Amazing waste."

The height of government financial folly cried Dief, had come one night when, in five hours, $19 billion had been whisked through the House and Parliament had been helpless to even question it.

Energy: Con Game Or Genuine Crisis

By VINCENT EGAN
Business and Consumer Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

As the long-playing debate about energy goes on, it begins to come down to a choice of two possibilities:

—Are we being conned by industry into paying higher prices for our energy supplies on the false pretext that our resources are rapidly disappearing

—Or do we face a genuine crisis that will force us to make do with less energy, and adjust our life-style to that shortage

Agreement on a definitive answer is next to impossible, as some 250 delegates appear to have found at an intensive two-day symposium on Canada's non-renewable resources, organized in Toronto by the Financial Post.

But one warning came through clearly: Even if Canadians are blessed with nearly unlimited supplies of oil, natural gas, coal, uranium and other energy resources, we cannot find ourselves in a serious economic trouble if Japan and the industrialized countries of Europe are hit by recession—as they could be if they are unable to obtain (or to afford) the oil they need to keep their economies afloat

Obviously, no single conclusion on the energy outlook could emerge from any symposium led by speakers as widely divergent as Aberdeen-man Kleese, secretary-general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (the Mideast oil producers' cartel); Peter Lougheed, Premier of Parliament Max Saltzman; and Ronald Ritchie, former senior vice-president of Imperial Oil Ltd.

In essence, however, the Arab producers' position is that they must get the highest possible price for their oil, cause what may. The socialist position is that Canada has plenty of oil-plus other resources—which should be preserved for future generations because they "won't go bad" and their value will increase steadily. And industry's position is that we can't let up on the country for finding new resources and bringing them to market.

Comfortably ensconced in a luxury hotel, none of the symposium's experts even alluded to the country's special and continuing need for assured sources of the energy and heat that alone make life tolerable here. Nor did that make it possible to allay the necessities of life across Canada's vast distances.

Any economist or politician who bases his stand only on narrow, short-term considerations of subsidies or price or anti-business sentiment could be leading us into long-term trouble.

The task of developing our resources for the future will demand action based on a broad, long-range assessment of all the multi-disciplinary requirements.

And that action must be taken soon, in the time-frame of resource development, 1980 is just around the corner—and that's when our known conventional reserves of oil and gas will be vanishing.

NDP Provides Opposition But Without The Answers

By DON O'HEARN
Queen's Park Bureau
Thomson News Service

TORONTO — It has long been the proud boast of the NDP that it is the real opposition in the legislature.

It says that though outnumbered by the Liberals its members are the ones who really provide the effective counter-thrust to the government, who offer the positive analysis and criticism of its policies.

And the party is not alone in thinking this. It has as good many non-partisan admirers as there are along the same lines.

And to an extent they are right. For the NDP-ers have a good many able members, particularly a segment of good speakers and able researchers who can present cases dramatically and forcefully.

Still at least this one observer won't credit it with being the most important opposition, and for one key reason.

And his reason is that while it can find much fault and express its criticisms cogently it seldom comes up with much in the way of answers.

This was illustrated rather graphically in the throne debate this year.

As I wrote a few days ago Liberal Leader Robert Nixon made a constructive speech on housing and land speculation.

And, most importantly, along with this he made suggestions, practical ones somewhere.

Mr. Lewis participated, of course, in this same debate.

He supported what both read and sounded better than Mr. Nixon's.

But there was one thing missing. No answers!

Plenty of criticism of lame were brought forward.

There was the accusation of shortcomings, inadequacies of trying to control inflation and shortage and unemployment.

There was lack of faith in anything promised in day care, for the elderly, women, and for the physically and mentally handicapped.

But it was all criticism and no constructive suggestion.

And while we all know that this can be a popular slogan we also know it isn't the answer to the problems of today.

So now, said the Prime Minister, the government has to deal even more vigorously with the twin economic evil, unemployment and inflation. There is a delicate balance between (them) and we have to be careful not to set off another round of inflation."

It was over the solar, with a fine sense of timing, looked around and paused while the House yelled.

Tribal Warfare Plagues Uganda

By JOHN D. HARRISON
Foreign Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

The latest bloodbath in Uganda and the resultant incredible performance of President Idi Amin says a good deal about what is really going on in that sick and weird country namely tribal warfare, plain and simple.

It wasn't an army coup against the imperious and cruel Amin as we understand them in the West. It was the surfacing of ancient tribal rivalries, the kind that still exist in most modern African black states.

To be explicit, of Uganda's nine main, different and warring tribal regions, one of the smallest is the Nile region of the Kakwa tribe, the home of General Amin.

It is one of the smaller tribes of Uganda, mainly Moslem and close to the larger tribe called Lugbara which is mainly Christian. General Amin is a Moslem. His slain army chief of staff, the murdered Brigadier Charles Arube though a Kakwa, was also a Christian.

When General Amin seized power from former civilian president Milton Obote in 1970, he counted on and received the support of his country's nine tribal regions. It is now believed he cannot count on any of them except his own and possibly not even the Lugbara for support.

After he overthrew Obote, Amin rewarded the Lugbaras by placing about 2,000 of them in the 20,000 man Ugandan army as well as giving them key positions along with Kakwa officers.

Even this hasn't been enough to keep the Lubaras happy since it is troops from this tribe which stormed the Kampala police headquarters where many thought the ousted Brig. Arube was held in custody.

To add to the confusion, the revolt of armed Lugbara army personnel against Amin is also believed to be a result of his strong leaning toward the Arab states. His Mideast Jihad campaign and the removal of Christian officers and officials from senior government jobs.

To say Gen. Amin is in trouble is a gross understatement. His conceivably tottery on the brink. Political murders and executions are rampant. In fact in that country, some say reaching 90,000 since he seized power.

And all this is going on within what is now a mainly black African state, the Indian population largely forced into exile

Parkland For Recreation Issue

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

The future use of parkland for recreational purposes in Belleville has been put in jeopardy. Where Mr. Robin Jeffrey's motion to enter into an agreement with the Four Seasons Hotel, for 90 parking spaces of parkland, which was approved by Council members with only Aldermen Russell, Smith and Corke opposing the motion.

It soon became apparent that Mr. Jeffrey's motion at the meeting on March 18 that the Four Seasons Quinte Harbour Hotel was paramount in the minds of many members of council. They revoked the Parks board of management recommendations to have a parkland development plans they had for the area.

I cannot understand how a rental fee of $100 for the 90 parking spaces for a year as agreed by the Four Seasons authorities could even be considered by Council. For this would cost the Four Seasons less than 2 cents a day for the 90 parking spaces. A bargain for the hotel, but it would hardly pay for the paper and the legal expense to draw up an agreement for the City of Belleville.

Alderman Paul Russell told the Council meeting that the parking lot on a Saturday evening in the summer months were available for the hotel's customers. Alderman Ben Corke said that parking spaces cost at today's values were in the $2,000 range. Alderman Jean Smith said she was reluctant to see Belleville have any parkland. But no matter what point of view was presented, it could not sway some members of Council from the course that the wishes of industry must be satisfied, regardless of the consequences to the citizens.

The taxpayers have paid out large amounts of money for parkland and its maintenance.

Is this all to be sacrificed to the whims of a few, who cannot or will not understand that people have a right to enjoy these parklands, without living in the shadow of a council which may decide these lands are expendable at any time, for the convenience of industry in Belleville.

If Council gives final approval for the Four Seasons hotel to use parkland for cars, citizens will know that they have been relegated to a secondary place in that society.

Papineau Development Controversy

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

The recent hearings on the vague subject of the proposed hot line development and the land involved in it, have done little if anything to clarify the situation. Surely the government with all its surveys and opinion can answer two simple questions.

1. Does the government propose to establish a park on Prince Edward Island and if so what is the exact size of the park and what boundaries will be affected and when?

2. Should the government intend to use expropriation to assemble the land or will the property be assembled by free negotiation with willing owners only?

It is common knowledge on Prince Edward Island that the land speculators are out in force and are effectively at city hall for the past year.

The new grandstand at the Belleville fair grounds is costing city taxpayers approximately $10,000 more than was expected, members of city council were told Monday. Total cost of the grandstand is about $80,000.

templating the expropriation of our property and other private properties, should the owners not be willing to sell.

The government and the government believes that the general public welfare should override the rights of individual owners should be such as not have the courage to say so.

I believe the individual property owners will go down without a fight. If there has to be a public discussion of this question let it be now before the forthcoming provincial election. The issues involved here can deep and the attention they should receive. A political campaign would not only solve the issue for the Prince Edward Island residents but also for many other landowners.

I call on our member and the government of which he is a part to clarify the issue squarely before the public for general discussion and decision.

Surely that is the democratic and fair thing to do!

In the March 20 Intelligencer we read that Alderman John Corke had introduced a notice of motion to have the speed limit on non-arterial streets reduced to 25 miles per hour.

As concerned parents we hope Alderman Corke's motion will be received by all interested citizens of our city.

Managing Editor

How much is a human life worth?

Surely more than the $200,000 Lamplighter Realty told Belleville city council it would cost to re-draft plans to include a fire-safety sprinkler system throughout an eight-storey waterfront highrise.

That figure was waved before city council and helped get the developers an exemption from Belleville's pioneer sprinkler bylaw, passed barely a month before.

* * *

The bylaw, believed to be the first of its kind put into effect in Canada, was the result of hours of study and planning by city fire chief Leo Culhane, his department fire prevention officer Paul Stephenson, and city solicitor John Miller.

Effective January 21st of this year, any motel, nursing or senior citizens home, or apartment building above five storeys erected in Belleville was to have a sprinkler system for fire prevention incorporated into the design.

But Lamplighter spokesman said their plans had all been made before the new bylaw was even up for discussion by city council. It would cost them $200,000 above the proposed $1.6 million price tag to draft new plans that included sprinklers.

Council bought that argument.

I don't.

The question is not whether Lamplighter had any plans drafted without sprinklers before a certain deadline.

The real issue is, as one city insurance man puts it: "Should anybody consider erecting apartment buildings in 1974 without automatically making provision for maximum safety measures?"

"Do you know how long it takes to empty some of those big buildings like Place Ville Marie?" the insurance man queries. "About two and a half hours," he answers his own question.

* * *

Among the safety features he mentions are "safe rooms", self-contained shelters at designated locations throughout highrises. That would prevent scenes like the 30 asphyxiated bodies firemen found in a washroom in a February 1 fire that killed 200 persons in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Then there are the 17 rooming house fire deaths in Toronto already this year.

And it CAN happen here.

Fire chief Culhane is afraid to think of what might have happened if last week's apartment block fire on West Moira St. had occurred an hour later than 1 p.m.

Damage to the 30-unit block has been set at $35,000, but the estimated 100 occupants escaped injury.

A basement sprinkler system would have nipped what is believed to be an arson attempt in the bud.

Lamplighter's 72-unit South Front St. highrise will have some sprinklers — in the basement and garbage chutes — and, at Chief Culhane's insistence, an access route for firefighting equipment, not included in original plans.

The proposed structure is supposed to be, like other similar city apartments, "fire-resistant", eight floors of concrete that just couldn't be inflammable.

* * *

And it is as fireproof as the Titanic was unsinkable until, as someone points out, people come into the picture.

Because wall-to-wall hallway broadloom and sofas are not fire-proof. Neither is human flesh.

Perhaps you've heard the poor joke making the rounds that some Lamplighter tenants won't have fire escape worries. They'll just have to open their windows and jump into the bay.

Hopefully, that's all it will stay — a bad joke.

He's Okay... This Time

Murray Trimble gives the "thumbs up" sign as he is carried to safety by firefighters Tuesday night from a rooming house fire in Toronto. The fire claimed one life bringing the total to 17 people killed in rooming house fires in Toronto this year, nine in the past three weeks. Five others, including a fireman, were injured in Tuesday night's fire. (CP Wirephoto)

Snowmobiler on Thick Ice

By GEORGE C. ROBERTS..
A Sawmaker

In reference to the article by Bob Huggan that appeared on page 2 of the Saturday, Feb. 23 issue of your publication, it seems to me that Mr. Huggan is condemning the use of the snowmobile as a recreational vehicle, and also snowmobilers as a bunch of maniacs bent on destroying wildlife, the environment, and generally making life miserable for the non-snowmobiling public.

Mr. Huggan implies that lake ice that can hold an ice-hut could not be counted on to hold a snowmobile with two passengers.

I assume that if the ice was thick enough to hold an ice-hut, it would also be thick enough to hold the weight of a man. Otherwise, how would one expect to get the ice-hut off the lake.

However, the fact still remains that ice that is too thin to hold the weight of a man could hold the weight of a snowmobile and two passengers.

This can be proven mathematically. To find the pressure (pounds per square inch) exerted on the ice by a body, it is necessary to divide the weight of the body (pounds) by the surface area of the body in contact with the ice surface (square inches).

If the weight of a snowmobile is about 600 pounds and there are two passengers each weighing 200 pounds (an exaggeration of course), and the dimensions of the track of the snowmobile in contact with the ice are 15 inches by 40 inches, then the pressure of the snowmobile on the ice would be the weight of the snowmobile over the area of the track, or 600 lbs. on 600 square inches, which equals 1.333 lbs. per square inch.

Similarly, the pressure exerted by a 200 pound man, whose feet cover an area in direct contact with the ice of 12 inches by 10 inches, would be 200 lbs. on 120 square inches, or 1.666 lbs. per square inch.

Granted, the difference is small, but it still shows that ice that is safe for icefishing is also safe for snowmobiling.

I believe that Mr. Huggan's article unjustly condemned all snowmobilers because of the actions of a few irresponsible members of the fraternity, and that on the whole, most snowmobilers are none or very few of the things that Mr. Huggan would have us believe they are.

Widows Advised to Sell House for Excitement

By ETHEL M. WELLS. ..

Are you lonely, depressed and want to put a little excitement in your life?

If you are a widow, put your house up for sale.

I will guarantee you there will never be a dull moment from 8 A.M. until 10 P.M. Make sure you have an apartment or have made other arrangements for a place of abode or you may find yourself sleeping in the street.

Houses sell much faster than you may realize.

Choose a reliable real estate firm that will, for a small percentage, relieve you of all the worry of selling your home.

Your realtor is experienced in dealing with people, and can detect the ones who are really interested in buying a home, from the ones who are just looking for something to do or see.

A few days after it becomes known your home is For Sale, women will call to find out if you have any furniture, dishes or old picture frames for sale.

In less time than it takes to tell it you have your attics, basements and cupboards emptied of all the things you wondered what you were going to do with.

If you are three score years and ten and living on borrowed time, the young people who come to buy the dishes will even try to get you to sell your old wooden bed and kitchen rocking chair.

They give you the impression they think you are going to an "Old Folk's Home", where you no longer need any worldly possessions.

Believe it or not you may even get a proposal of marriage.

Some man may wish the pleasure of your company, all expenses or the pleasure of helping you spend the money you received from the sale of your home.

Now, all you lonely widows, if you want to lose weight and are looking for excitement don't seek it in Spain or Mexico, you will find it right here at home.

Put your house up for sale and plan on relaxing and enjoying life, free from all responsibility.

Smoking Personal Habit That Affects Everyone

By MERRILL DALES

The problem of smoking is definitely a personal thing, and yet it effects each and every one of us. Have you ever considered the rights of those who have quit smoking or have become ex-smokers?

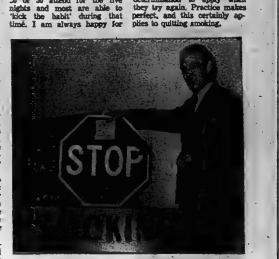
Smokers have a vast advertising organization behind them to enlist young prospects and to keep the established smokers believing they are doing the right thing. Cigarette companies don't have to account for the suffering they cause and lives they ruin.

In the past, the non-smoker has had no organization to press for the right to breathe fresh, clean air. GASP organization — Group Against Smoking Pollution — have now been formed in many cities and act as spokesmen for the non-smoker. The ultimate aim of these groups is to have a non-smokers' Bill of Rights passed by Parliament.

Another aim of GASP is to discourage smoking in public places and make it socially unacceptable. As time goes on the non-smoker will be more organized, more vocal and more active in claiming the right for clean, fresh air for everyone.

Since few adults are smoking and cigarette sales are still going up, the increase can be attributed to new and younger smokers taking up the habit. The exemplar role of parent, teacher, doctor and peer is recognized as the deciding factor as to whether a child will smoke or not.

As my tax money goes toward educating my children, I feel that I would get more value from my education dollar if teachers could be rewarded in some way if they didn't smoke and helped support a more positive exemplar role. I believe a good example must be set in the home first before we can expect our children not to smoke.



Would attendance at club or organization meetings increase? Perhaps friends haven't invited you back to their home as often as they used to. Could it be that they don't like to be left with a smoke-filled home What is the example set by the public places who have the taste of a good meal spoiled by the smoking of others around them

How about your children and pets? Do you ever think what a needless question. And yet when they refuse smoke-filled air in your home, it is the same as if they were smoking themselves. There is much more respiratory trouble among children of parents who smoke.

It has been my privilege to work with other members of the Hastings-Prince Edward TB and RD Association to help run the Five-Day Plan to Stop Smoking in Belleville area. This Plan is practical and successful and has been in operation throughout the world since 1969. This is one of the several projects backed by the Association.

We feel it is worth five evenings of our volunteer time if we help to get just one person off cigarettes for life. Think then how rewarding it is when 20 or 30 attend for the five nights and most are able to "kick the habit" during that time. I am always happy for the ones that make it and I feel sorry for those who weren't able to make the grade.

Personally, I failed twice before I quit smoking 7 years ago, and I feel that to fail is one attempt given a person more determination to apply when they try again. Practice makes perfect, and this certainly applies to quitting smoking.

Kicking the Habit

Smoking for many people is the habit of a lifetime — a short lifetime, perhaps — but a habit that has developed over a long period of time. Merrill Dales, one of the organizers of the Stop Smoking Five-Day Plan presented every few months at the Belleville General Hospital, devotes a considerable amount of his time to trying to help people quit smoking. In an article in today's Intelligencer Mr. Dales outlines a reason why he believes people should kick the smoking habit and live longer.

Following Mags Not Always Easy

By WEER E. TRAVELLER

Following a mag comes easy to some people, ask for any location and "Bingo" they can tell you.

Pose the question on how one can reach Timbuctoo, and with no hesitation whatsoever, they come up with an answer, like "Take the 401 to the Ivy Lea Bridge, follow-81 to New Jersey, cross the Thames Estuary to the Red Sea, making sure that India is on your left keep going straight for a couple of miles, pass the fish and chip shop on your right and it's the second country past France.

Just like that! As quick as a wolf whistle at a swivel a mini-skirt.

Not, however, me. I'd get lost in a one-car parking lot. When finding myself in Toronto then I should have been in Tallahassee. I acquired a copy of the Chamber of Commerce brochure, latest edition, and proceeded to look for the points of interest, having nothing to do you understand, and needless to say it didn't take too long for me to get lost, so I asked the way from several natives, and came to the conclusion that no one spoke English, not everyone I spoke to seemed to be carrying the same brochure as I was, and everyone of them were using their hands to describe the routes I should take.

They were, to say the least very friendly people, and most kind, but one small thing bothered me: they were all pointing in different directions. Dozens of people could see groups of people standing with outward looks and madly waving arms.

After watching with interest the demonstrations of semaphore in another language, and as I was not very conversant in arm waving, I decided to move on and would proceed to find my own way about your city, a fatal mistake. I've already mentioned my directional sense, well it hadn't changed any. By this time I was getting low on a wolf whistle, when my map I headed for the nearest Service Station.

I requested gas. Well, you should have seen them go, bringing forth a long tube attached to a very shiny silver machine, they added a mask, and placed the whole darned contraption over my face, and before I could yell "Regular," they removed my tonsils, appendix and everything else I had which they thought worth removing.

Wierd but nice folk. I thought, fabulous hat, although not voicing it aloud. Come to think of it, I couldn't — not after losing my equilibrium when the gas goes with it. However it was a reasonable price at 43 cents a gallon who am I to complain?

Recovering somewhat hastily, I again attempted to follow the map, this time to the Chamber of Commerce, and wonder of wonders, I found it; pulling into their parking lot I waited patiently until I was winched from the water and wrung out, then entering the office requested to see the manager.

He, poor man, seemed quite harrassed at my appearance, but smiled charmingly and offered his congratulation on being the one millionth visitor that day, all with the same point in view. Being a nice sort of chap, he made me welcome and presented me with a map of the city showing me the correct route out of town and to the 401.

Shaking me by the hand and reassuring me that Belleville was a nice place to live, he led me to the door and pointed me in the right direction.

Following his advice, I soon found myself on a broad highway. "This is more like it," I said to myself, as I came to a halt at a red stop-light, and then was utterly delighted when a voice announced that the Chevelle now sitting on Runway 3 was cleared for take-off.

Honestly, folks, Belleville is a very nice place, and if I ever find myself in this region again, I'll look you up, wherever you are.

What Are You Doing About Your Postal Code?

LESLIE BARNES

Leslie Barnes: "My postal code? NK1 1Z6. I use it all the time. I find it makes things faster. I remember it by its initials. It seems to follow a pattern."

ELIZABETH MITCHELL

Elizabeth Mitchell: "Yes! I'm using my postal code. I just memorized it. that's all. It's easy, after you've written it a few times.

"I use the codes of those I write to. Working in a library, I suppose, remembering things comes with the job."

WARREN SPAFFORD

Warren Spafford: "I don't know my code. My wife does, though. I hardly every write letters so I don't know what the code is.

"If I need it my wife has it written on a paper stuck on the side of the fridge. I think the code system is a good one. Only thing is we don't get enough cheques in the mail."

ELDORA POPE

Mrs. Eldora Pope knows the postal code of her employer better than her personal one.

"I think its a good idea but a lot of people aren't used to it. I use the code at work when I send out letters for my employer. But I haven't memorized my home one yet. I do mail it to letters, and put it on Christmas cards," she said.

JOHN HUNT

John Hunt lives near Toronto and was in the city on business.

"Sure I use the postal code. I put it in my mind and now have no trouble remembering it. I remember it because it sort of rhymes. And once you start making out bills, you can't help but remember.

"I don't try to remember the postal code of those I write to. I have to look after my own first," he said.

Quebec Picture Changes

Laymen Playing Bigger Role Because Clergy Numbers Cut

MONTREAL (CP) — The cheerful, energetic priest pulled off his overshoes at the entrance to Montreal's Grand Seminary and talked about the trials, challenges and opportunity of the church.

"I'll give you an example of new things," said Abbe Maurice Comeau, director of vocations for the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Montreal.

"I know a parish where there used to be a pastor and three other priests. Today the pastor is the only one. I think he does much better work because now he has something like 100 laymen working with him."

Abbe Maurice Comeau

Father Comeau was illustrating one aspect of the change, almost beyond recognition in the face of the Catholic church's previous bastion of the traditional faith through the centuries.

Laymen—and women—are taking a much more prominent role in the ritual and work of the church to compensate for a spectacular decline of the clergy.

Church statistics show the number of young men entering the priesthood in the predominantly French speaking province diminished by nearly 75 per cent in 13 years. There also has been a dropout of ordained priests but officials said this trend has been reduced.

French Quebec is cited as a striking example of change arising from Vatican II. One church study, however, attributed even greater impact to the Quiet Revolution of the 1960s which revamped a society in which the church ran the education system and permeated all aspects of French-Canadian life.

The picture varies throughout the province. Though the priest may no longer be the "universal man" of earlier days—his church-call figure once figured prominently in virtually any Montreal scene—he still constitutes the most "visible leadership" in such areas as the Gaspe, no one authority's view.

Spokesmen pinpointed these trends:

—Though church attendance has fallen sharply, the laity is shouldering more and more functions formerly exercised exclusively by priests.

—Candidates for the priesthood now are being screened by panels of laymen in an attempt to determine in advance whether they have a true vocation and the "personal resources" required for the calling.

—Clerics who ask for permission to leave the priesthood are encouraged by their bishops to take leave of absence. They may change their minds.

Some officials feel undue publicity is focused on departing priests while little is heard about those who stay on their jobs and adjust to changing roles.

What is the general picture?

Figures from the Canadian Catholic Conference in Ottawa and the Montreal National Office of the Clergy show 46 French-speaking priests were ordained in Quebec last year and an identical number in 1973 compared with 182 in 1960.

In 1972, French Quebec's diocesan clergy totalled 4,870 and religious clergy—those belonging to various orders—numbered 3,197. There were 3,238 Christian brothers and 29,584 sisters in a French Catholic population of 4,801,750.

In 1968, the comparable figures were 5,376 diocesan priests, 3,208 religious, 4,887 brothers and 34,404 sisters in a population of 4,517,000. The average age has climbed in all categories.

Father Comeau said Quebec may face a situation similar in a few years to France, where the scarcity of the ordained has resulted in Sunday mass being replaced in many parishes by other services without a priest.

"We say to the people of this diocese that we need priests but I am not sure they realize it is really true for them," said Father Comeau. "They feel, 'well, the bishop will send another if we have no priest in this parish.'"

But Father Comeau confidently believes that increased participation by the laity signals growing understanding of a new conception of vocations as defined by Vatican II.

The first thing is to have people discover the meaning of baptism and experience Christ in their lives—then we discover the meaning of the priesthood," said Father Comeau.

All Christians are responsible and all have a vocation. We have to find out exactly what kind of service we should give."

Quebec would not lack priests in the future if the faithful realized their vocation. The conception now being taught is that all Christians—not only bishops and clergy—bear responsibility for the church and the quality of Christian life.

The laity now assist priests in parish councils in Quebec as elsewhere in Canada. Nuns assist in pastoral work. Laymen read the lessons at mass, assist the priest in giving communion and teach the catechism. Last year six church centres were established in Montreal and welcomed 30,000 young persons. Teams of young married couples join in studying family vocations.

Why do priests leave?

Opinions vary but Father Comeau feels society has changed so drastically that the work of the priest often finds out to be far different from what he expected, a far more lonely.

Figures figures show 200 Canadian diocesan priests departed in the 10-year period ending in 1969—209 French-speaking and 90 English-speaking.

Rev. Barry Jones, assistant director of press services for the Montreal archdiocese, said the 128 religious priests who departed in 1970 constituted only 2.1 per cent of the 6,000 total in Canada at the time. Sixty-five have since married.

Father Jones reported the number of new English-speaking priests has varied between two and six annually in Montreal, where he estimated the English-Catholic population at roughly 125,000 in 35 parishes and missions served by some 90 priests.

Two English-language seminarians are studying as a result of newspaper advertisements published in the archdiocese last year in a move unprecedented in Canada.

"The tragedy of the church in the last 25 years is that it allowed this treasure—man and—the media—to grow up beside it and had no contact with it whatsoever," said Father Jones.

He has been noticed in several parishes that the young people of university age are coming back. That doesn't mean we are going to get everybody back.

"The church is going to have to find new ways of reaching out to people within the community. Hopefully, we can put some kind of Christian flow into the media stream so that it is evident. I don't think it is evident now."

Everyone Must Face His Own Gethsemane

By DR. GORDON C. SMITH

One of the events before the Crucifixion was Gethsemane, a fiction writer would likely have omitted the scene. He would have made his hero of sterner stuff. The writers of the Gospel story. The link with humanity was too real, too important for that.

In her autobiography, the Duchess of Windsor wrote, "I was unprepared and unarmed. Rather late in life I found myself not only in love but loved as few modern women could ever expect to be loved, with the most obscure details of my previously unnoticed existence reverberating in the four corners of the earth."

The confession of the duchess is but a heading illustrative of what happens too often behind the scenes, until the last act finally inevitably.

She went on, "Nothing that I had known before or learned seemed to apply in my new circumstances. Had I but one way, when at the eleventh hour full understanding came to me, this device would have had a different ending, if indeed there had been occasion to write it at all."

Fortunately, multitudes in all walks of life continue to be prepared and armed for [illegible]. They have had a teacher all along. He had His time of decision in the wilderness three years before. He would not swerve now, 'unless God revealed an easier way.

Jesus prayed, "Father, all things are possible to thee, remove this cup from me; yet not what I will, but what thou will" (Mark 14: 35-42). In the Garden of Gethsemane the Master came to realize afresh that, in dealing with evil, there is no easy way.

It is also true that the higher the office, the greater the burden. Thus Henri Frederick Amiel wrote in his famous Journal, "To be misunderstood, even by those whom one loves is the cross and bitterness of life."

He continued, "It is the secret of that sad and melancholy smile on the lips of great men which so few understand. It is the cruelest trial reserved for devotion. It is what must have often wrung the heart of the Son of Man."

Everyone has his own Gethsemane. It is foolish to retreat. It is disastrous to vacillate. It is insufficient to depend on friends or professional counsellors.

We have the heroic souls of history to teach us. We especially have the ministry of God's Son to inspire us. Because of his complete identification with our humanity, he bore the lives to make intercession for us. Jesus Christ understands our need and can help us best of all.

CP News Roundup

Oil Lands Want Price To Rise

OTTAWA (CP) — The head of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) said Friday nearly all members of the group want oil prices to continue rising.

L. A. Khene, Algerian secretary-general of OPEC, told reporters he is "asking for higher prices and I hope that we will have higher prices."

Mr. Khene had just emerged from meetings with Energy Minister Donald Macdonald and External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, in which, he said, he held "general talks about the oil issue."

World oil prices should rise at the same pace as inflation on the processed goods that oil producers must import from the oil-consuming nations, he said.

International inflation now is running 12 to 14 per cent, but he did not say future oil-price increases would match that level.

At about $18.50 a barrel now, oil prices have more than doubled in the last year.

No Imports

ST. CATHARINES (CP) — The Ontario wine industry will not be importing grape concentrate this year to augment wine production, Ronald Moyer, chairman of the Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board, said Friday.

Despite two successive years of below-average grape production in Ontario, the board and wineries have been unable to come to an agreement over imports, he said.

Coverage Better

TORONTO (CP) — A no-fault insurance plan drawn up by the Insurance Bureau of Canada (IBC) would result in lower premiums and better coverage than might be obtained under private insurance plans based on legal liability, Ian Mair, chairman of the IBC, told a news conference Friday.

Young drivers stand to benefit most, although premiums would drop in almost all categories, Mr. Mair said.

Horse Used

TORONTO (CP) — Premier William Davis used a horse-and-buggy Friday to get to the official opening of a $140-million, 5¾-mile extension to the city's subway system.

He told several hundred persons at the ceremony that it was his answer to increasing oil prices.

Levy Planned

MONTREAL (CP)—The Maritimes Employers' Association (MEA), representing shipping agents and stevedoring companies, will impose tariffs on merchandise handled in the port of Montreal starting May 1.

Arnold Masters, MEA president, said Friday the tariffs are intended to help pay benefits to longshoremen who no longer are working at the port.

JOHN MUNRO

Munro Busy

MONTREAL (CP) — The personal mediation efforts of Labor Minister John Munro to settle the inland shipping strike continued Friday but none of the participants would comment on the talks.

Voice Sought

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Unions are prepared to accept technological change but must be treated as equals by management in deciding how to implement such changes, David Archer ,president of the Ontario Federation of Labor (OFL), said in an interview Friday.

He said most Canadian companies still believe that matters not written into a contract are only for management to decide.

"They still have this master-servant attitude and that workers have no right or say in matters that affect them."

Not Upsetting

TORONTO (CP) — Alberta's new oil royalty rate announced Thursday was a little higher than the industry expected but not too upsetting, analysts and company spokesmen say.

They say the new rate schedule, which becomes effective Monday, will give oil producers about 30 cents of the $2.35 increase on the wellhead price of a barrel of domestic crude.

Views Lacking

TORONTO (CP) — The "average people" of Ontario have not been given enough opportunity to express their views on the laws that affect them every day, Attorney-General Robert Welch said Friday.

PCs Won't Back NDP Tax Stand

OTTAWA (CP) — It became obvious Friday that the minority Liberal government likely will not be defeated at least until a new budget is presented later this spring.

This was indicated by Conservative reaction to the government report on corporate tax concessions which was tabled in the Commons Friday. The report said $4,000 jobs and $8.4 billion in new sales will be created by the concessions by the end of 1975.

The concessions, reduced taxes and faster tax write-off provisions for manufacturing and processing industries, were approved by Parliament last year.

Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield said his party considers the cuts a budgetary matter and will not decide its position until the report has been studied in the context of the budget, expected sometime after Easter.

New Democrat Leader David Lewis, however, called the report "a shameful insult to Parliament and all Canadians," His party was ready to see the government fall on the issue.

He challenged Mr. Stanfield either to join the NDP in pressuring a motion calling for a review—or present a Conservative motion the NDP might support.

At the Conservatives' insistence last year, the tax cut legislation contains provisions for a review by Parliament. All that's needed is 60 MPs signatures on a petition, and there will be a debate and vote on whether to continue the concessions.

A vote against continuing them likely would mean defeat of the government in the Commons and probably an election.

Mr. Lewis said the concessions cost $540 million last year and will cost $1 billion this year.

But Mr. Stanfield said his party will make up its own mind.

"Any action that we take, we'll take . . . on our own and not as part of any kind of an NDP game that may be going on."

Mr. Lewis has 31 seats in the 264-seat Commons and Mr. Stanfield indicated his party will not support the New Democrats for the time being.

Undismayed by Mr. Stanfield's remarks, the NDP plans to canvass members of other parties for support. However, with the rest of the Commons standing at 109 Liberals, 15 Social Credit, one independent and two vacancies, their chances are viewed as slim.

The report, meanwhile, said the measures produced significant economic benefits everywhere in the manufacturing and processing industries. Although precise measurement of their effect was impossible, their advantages were detectable.

Two Canadians Seized By Ethiopian Rebels

ADDIS ABABA (AP) — United States oil company is trying to negotiate for the release of three U.S. citizens and two Canadians captured by separatist guerrillas in Eritrea province.

In Ethiopia's government crisis, anti-government demonstrations broke out Friday in three provincial capitals and several persons were reported killed and wounded in clashes with police.

Sources said Friday that the five North Americans were exploring for oil Tuesday in the northern province when a storm forced down their helicopter 45 miles northwest of Massawa on the Red Sea. Villagers said guerrillas of the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) burned the helicopter and bustled off the five men with army patrols in pursuit.

Texaco's Houston, Tex., headquarters identified three of the men as Clifford M. James, 37, of Walkerton, Ont., and Powers W. Kayne Jr., 36, of Plainview, Tex.—both geologists—and Mohd Fazela, a U.S. consultant to Ethiopia's ministry of mines. Fazela's age and hometown were unknown.

Texaco in Houston said another of the men, J. W. Rogers, is its employee but it could not supply his age or hometown. Canwest Aviation Ltd. of Calgary said its president, Don Wederfort, 38, was the pilot of the helicopter.

CFRB Fined

White House Avoids Watergate Showdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House has avoided a new legal confrontation with the Watergate prosecution by turning over subpoenaed evidence.

The evidence was delivered Friday afternoon by a White House messenger after the White House announced earlier in the day that it would comply with the subpoena.

Neither the office of special prosecutor Leon Jaworski nor White House spokesmen would disclose what was included, but there were indications that no tape recordings were involved. Rather, it appeared that the material included documents and data from presidential files.

A question remains, however, on the status of a request from the House of Representatives judiciary committee for tape recordings of presidential conversations.

The committee has sought tapes of 42 conversations for its impeachment inquiry.

However, some of the conversations, including five meetings between President Nixon and top aides last April 15, may not have been taped.

—Former deputy attorney-general William Ruckelshaus said the odds now favor the House returning articles of impeachment against Nixon.

Women Are Reviving Pioneer Crafts In Napanee's Allan MacPherson House

There's a revival going on in Napanee.

Every Wednesday afternoon for six weeks, 40 women are meeting together, breathing life into the old Allan MacPherson House.

They're getting together to learn pioneer crafts, as they have done for three years now.

The MacPherson House, built in 1826 and restored by the people of Napanee to its initial charm, is the perfect setting for these craft classes.

Throughout the many rooms of the house, women are weaving, tatting, quilting and crocheting, using techniques and patterns that have been handed down through generations.

"This house is used as much as possible for displays, demonstrations and classes, like these," says Diane MacKinnon, one of the Friends of the Laird, the auxiliary group that supports the MacPherson House.

"This is definitely not a roped-off museum," she says.

Co-chairman of the crafts committee, Mrs. McKinnon explains that interest in maintaining old skills has grown in the community.

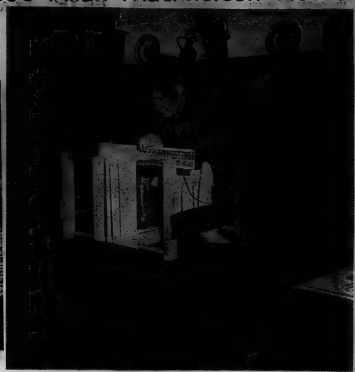
"Many women who first came just to learn how to do macrame have become involved in the historic aspect of the crafts and have come back again to learn more."

Joyce Johnston, who is coordinating the quilting classes, spends some time each week dealing with the history of quilting, explaining how patterns originated and altered with the years.

"Patchwork is a craft that is as old as women are," Mrs. Johnston says. "It is one art form that has been entirely feminine.

"With the current emphasis on women's role in society, it's nice to see quilting taking its place as an important craft."

Each week Mrs. Johnston's class is visited by a local quilter who brings the most interesting quilts from her collection, and shares her knowledge about designs and stitching techniques.



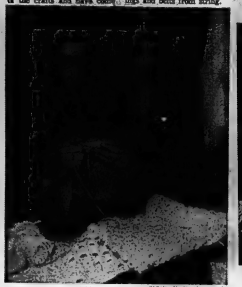
In the quilting class, women practise making patchwork designs, and learn how to quilt on a large frame set up in the upstairs bedroom. The quilt being completed this season is 100 years old, and will be donated to the Allan MacPherson House.

In a downstairs room, Mary Dykstra teaches several women to crochet, knit and tat using patterns their great-grandmothers used. Across the hall, a macrame class, under the instructin of Linda Burke, creates intricate hangings and belts from string.

Out in the spacious kitchen, Mrs. H.M. Rathbun and Louise Graves give lessons in box loom weaving to a group of enthusiastic learners. This old method of weaving, originally an improvisation and now a recognised technique, is a good method for making pretty samplers to hang, or articles such as placemats and belts.

The early afternoon sun shines in the big many-paned windows of the house that is filled with the sounds of women chatting and laughing as they work.

The old handicrafts survive and the spirit of the past lives on.



Joyce Patterson, weaving on a box loom for the first time, spends Wednesday afternoons with several other Napanee area women in the large kitchen of the Allan Macpherson House, learning the ins and outs of this pioneer craft. She works in front of the enormous fireplace in which a cheery fire burns during the classes.

Story, Photos By Isabel Huggan

Marie Cook wields an enormous knitting needle as she learns the intricacies of making "broomstick lace", a very old crocheting technique that creates a delicate, airy pattern.

Learners in the macrame class are already turning out belts and hangings. Sally Hartwick, Dorothy Colquhoun and Fae Keech work away with increasingly nimble fingers and growing enthusiasm for the craft.

Dorothy Burleigh of Bath enjoys the spring sunshine pouring into an upstairs room of the house as she demonstrates the fine art of rug hooking. A member of the Ontario Hooking Guild, Mrs. Burleigh is one of the women delighted to see the old handicrafts being revived.

Tying the knots necessary to the setting up of a box loom prior to weaving, Henrietta Fairbairn spends a pleasant hour getting ready to do the actual weaving.

OHIP Covers Pap Tests

TORONTO (CP) — Health Minister Frank Miller said Thursday there has been no change in policy of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan (OHIP) relating to the payment of pap smear tests for women or the frequency of the test.

He was replying to an earlier question in the legislature from Dr. Morton Shulman (NDP—Toronto High Park) who said there had been a change of policy and that OHIP would not pay for well-female examinations.

The health minister said the matter boiled down to the judgment of the physician.

" . . . If in the physician's judgment, a pap smear should be done, it will be paid for by OHIP. . . . There has been no change in OHIP policy relating to payment for pap smears or for frequency of this test. In fact, our staff have indicated that there are probably more being claimed now than ever before."

More Bad News For Beef Eaters

Bad news for beef eaters: Eaton's of Oshawa, Ontario, today announced new meat-pricing policies that, over beef prices this fall and winter, will mean the fact that many operators are going out of business.

In spite of those high supermarket prices, the men who buy calves and fatten them for sale claim they're experiencing great losses. They say, according to the Ottawa Journal, that they paid high prices for calves last fall and that feed and fuel have gone up in price. Their sale price of 63 to 67 cents per pound of fattened cattle represents a loss, they say.

The feedlot owners are blaming widespread importation of U.S. cattle for the economic squeeze and cattlemen are urging the government to place a quota on importation. The U.S. has stolen quotas for the importation of Canadian cattle.

Two markets are now featuring consumer-oriented half-hour shows. The new Global program produces "Beware" a fairly detailed look at consumer products and services every Friday at 6:30 p.m. The CBC has its "Marketplace", a slick and fast moving show Sunday evenings at 10:30.

"Beware" recently examined children's cereals, complete with stomach-turning dramatic staging of mess inadequate car seats and recommended some safe car seats. Marketplace looked at buying beef by the side and found some flaws in its illustrats those times bulk buying isn't a bargain.

Aside from Marketplace, the CBC not too long ago conducted its "consumers' test" which questioned a panel of experts and a panel of "ordinary" people about consumer topics.

To the horror of the CBC "ordinary" people knew more about spending a dollar then the "experts".

Necessity is the mother of invention and all that.

The bulk of those so-called "pure natural" cereals like Quaker's Harvest Crunch is oats. If you bought plain oats under the Quaker brand name, you'd pay about 2.5 cents per ounce. Harvest Crunch will cost you over 5 cents an ounce.

A few years ago we called that type of cereal granola and you made it yourself in the oven or bought it at the health food store. Unwilling to miss any opportunity, several corporations have called it the "new natural" cereal fad and are now producing an manner of "pure" cereals. (If it's so unnatural to be "pure" that corporations feel compelled to label these particular products, what is everything else we're eating?)

Anyway, if you don't want to pay more than 80 cents for a small box of cereal — tasty as it is — here's a recipe for doing your own. Mix together six cups rolled oats, ½ cup sesame seeds, ½ cup wheat germ, ½ cup shredded coconut, ½ cup chopped raw cashews, ¼ cup oil, ¼ cup honey. Bake at 200 degrees for one hour spread on a cookie sheet. Stir in one cup raisins. Store in tightly sealed container. This batch will cost about $3.00 and make close to 10 cups, a considerable savings.

Successful Living

Affluence Upsets Family's Balance

By DORIS CLARK

The revolt against parents is an integral part of the revolt against affluence. Families caught on the treadmill of goods-getting tend to discharge their parental duties financially rather than, paternally.

If a young son asks "What's Dad like?" "How do the stars work?" or "What do you do when you're in love?", Dad pleads the pressure of work and says, "Here, kid, take a couple of bucks and go to the movie or to that champion hockey game!" If not this, Dad is away at work or too often absent from home for "business reasons" to encourage much asking of his advice.

This has the result of making the mother the dominant figure in the life of the home, with less than ideal consequences. The educated, emancipated woman finds little image responsibility for the care of her children becomes frustrated with the shadowy, elusive husband constantly away in pursuit of money and things The cannibal dream of success has reunited legal enslavement and an unhappy home in which nothing good seems to be said of the marriage contract.

Maintaining lip-service to the sanctity of sex, one or both parents may seek relief for post-cop emotional capital on escapades changing from harmless flirtations to frequent adultery - about one of every three marriages ending eventually in divorce or separation.

The children of such homes live in a state of perpetual emotional siege, subject daily to the psychoses of a mother looking desperately to them for affection.

This combination of the moral breakdown of the marriage and a mother starved for affection produces the femininely soft, unmanly youth whose permissive training often sends him to college with childhood traits that leave him unprepared upon graduation to face up to the shock of the barbered hair, punctuality, and other conformities required of him in the world o this "square" corporate employers.

The emotional hang-ups that surface at this time of his realisation of unpreparedness and street life are terms required by the existing society leads him to review the situation in terms of the family life that has brought him to this crisis. In this critical review he does not like what he recalls. He finds the family life provided by his parents inadequate for the proper training of children. But unlike his status-conscious parents, he openly chooses to reject the traditional institution of the family - sometimes claiming satisfaction in his experimentations in new forms of sexual relations, sometimes experiencing tragic consequences.

Alienated as our young may feel from affluent middle-class culture and from their parents, the primary target of their ire is the agency which has made this culture and their parents what they are - the "system" or "establishment".

Dear Doris: I have $5,000 cigarette coupons. I'd be willing to get a wheelchair, but now I find I can't locate a mail address to send them away.

Friends and relatives have saved them and collected them for nearly a year and I would like to know if you could give me the address.

Would Be Most Pleased

Dear Would-Be: Well so would I — if a reader who knows would tell us. Sounds like quite a deal.

Was it any particular cigarette company, or would any old cigarette package do? Better give me more details.

Confidential to Chic: When the strong hues of youth are dashed by a broken romance, it may seem like the end of the world. But many other girls have experienced that can't-think-straight-for-mind feeling. You want fulfilment so much.

I'd say he was sincere when he said all those nice things and when he gave you that ring. But then he moved away, grew up a bit, maybe found other companionable people; they were close at hand; and friendship— convenient friendship— flowered.

It will be four years before you are 21. The best way to get him out of your mind is to practise being a sociable person and accepting dates from none of the fine people you are bumping into every day, one way or another.

Don't give up; don't give in.

Parents Sick To Death Of Battling Children

Dear Ann Landers: You often print letters from children who write to complain about parents who fight a lot. This letter will be a switch. My husband and I are sick to death of our married children and their constant arguing. Neither can agree and making everyone miserable.

Our daughter can't open her mouth without saying something insulting to her husband. He is a quiet person who just sits there and takes it. One of these days I wouldn't be surprised if he blew his top and gave her a crack in the teeth.

Our son has a terrible temper and tries to browbeat his wife but she gives it right back to him. When we have the four of them to dinner every Friday evening our husband and I always go to bed with a headache. Please give me some advice before I go crazy.—Parental Referees

Dear Rats: Tell those Battling Bearcats that your Friday dinners are cancelled for the next month and by that time you hope they will have learned to settle their differences at home and behave civilly at your table. When the month has passed, invite them again. I'll bet there'll be big improvement. If not, tell them you'll see them in another month. Keep it up until they learn to conduct themselves decently. In the meantime, you and your husband will get a badly needed rest.

Dear Ann Landers: I have been a faithful reader for many years and today I want to ask a favor. This morning it was 20 degrees above zero. I am heartsick over the animals that face these temperatures without adequate shelter.

A bale of straw costs only a dollar and a lot of it is left in a box or a doghouse would give these animals what they need—shelter from frigid weather.

Yesterday I saw two unkempt dogs—not place in which to get out of the cold, their hair matted. That same evening I noticed a small kitten trying to keep warm under a parked car's wagon and mewing pitifully. Wo

Most Irishmen are best at blarney and boozing. When it comes to sex they can take it or leave it. If it's a toss-up between making love and a wet-ass TV, they'll take the latter every time. Lang Says Abortion Law Being More Tightly Applied

OTTAWA (CP) — Justice minister Otto Lang, swamped with almost 30,000 abortion letters in recent months, says his plea for a tightening of application of present laws have had some effect.

He says that as a result of his representations to provincial attorneys-general last year, some hospital abortion committees have started following the spirit of the abortion law. But he still expresses concern that some of these committees are operating in a fashion that virtually abortion on demand.

Meanwhile, his office says he has received 30,000 letters about abortion since a highly-publicized abortion trial in Montreal last November.

Fewer than 100 of these support more liberalized abortion laws, a spokesman for his office said Friday.

No new abortion law is being considered, he says.

Under present law a therapeutic abortion is legal if abortion committee finds that continued pregnancy would endanger the life and health of a mother.

At a meeting of attorneys-general last May, Mr. Lang said some hospital committees were not following the spirit of the law and were granting abortions for social and economic reasons.

He has mentioned this many times in subsequent public statements without much reaction, until last week in his elaboration of his beliefs in a Commons committee got front-page coverage in Toronto.

Ontario's health minister and the president-elect of the Canadian Medical Association reacted to that publicity by saying Mr. Lang is passing the buck.

Perrin Beatty (PC—Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo) mentioned that reaction in the Commons Thursday and asked if new legislation is planned to "clearly specify the terms under which abortion can take place."

Mr. Lang said the present legislation is clear.

"It was Parliament's hope in passing that law (in 1969) that only a medical judgment, responsibly made, could intervene to say when an abortion might indeed be legal," he said.

He said attorneys-general are responsible for the enforcement of Criminal Code provisions. And these ministers knew Mr. Lang's position well.

Mr. Lang's answer to those seeking more liberal abortion laws is firm.

"Our government has steadfastly refused to accede to the many representations we receive, both inside the Commons and out, to remove abortion from the criminal law and we have no intention of widening the law to allow abortion except where the continuation of a pregnancy is a real threat to the woman's life or health," his memo says.

But Mr. Lang could be forced to bring in more legislation in the not-distant future. This depends on the outcome of appeals in the case of Dr. Henry Morgantaler of Montreal.

Mafia Money Laundered In Toronto Says Shulman

TORONTO (CP) —Dr. Morton Shulman (NDP—Toronto High Park) says that millions of dollars of Mafia money is being "laundered" in Toronto.

In the legislature Friday, he questioned Solicitor-General George Kerr about the murder of Harvey Leach in Detroit recently.

"Has he looked into the activity of the Toronto lawyer who financed Mr. Leach through a Queen Street investment corporation and what is he doing about that particular problem of laundering money."

Mr. Kerr said he was unaware of any details concerning the murder.

Outside the legislature, Dr. Shulman said in an interview that Mr. Leach had an amount of money which police believed had been "laundered" in Toronto.

Laundered money was cash obtained through illegal activities that was funnelled into Toronto and then sent back into the U.S. as supposedly clean money from real estate or other investments.

Once back in the U.S., he said, the newly-cleaned funds could be used to finance criminal activities or the takeover of legitimate businesses by the Mafia.

Dr. Shulman said his information is that the Mafia money laundering business is a major concern in Toronto that deals in millions of dollars.

He charged that the provincial police are apparently doing nothing about the problem.

U.S. Criminals Said Coming Into Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — A Conservative MP said the Commons Friday that there are so many American criminals entering Canada that police are running a shuttle service to the border points of Niagara Falls and Fort Erie.

But Immigration Minister Robert Andras said he has no evidence to support the allegation, made by Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth).

Mr. Andras said no representations have been made to his department by the Ontario attorney-general.

With 40 million visitors entering Canada each year, he said there is bound to be the odd illegal entry, Mr. Andras said.

Mr. Kempling said police forces are returning the criminals to the border, only to have them cross back again later.

Beef Subsidy Extended To All Grades of Cattle

OTTAWA (CP) — The government gave in Friday to opposition and farm demands for changes in its beef subsidy program, agreeing to extend subsidy payments to all grades of cattle.

But the payments, now made at a rate of seven cents a pound on the top four grades of beef, will be dropped to five cents a pound in order to subsidize the full range of slaughtered cattle grades.

In a statement, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said the weekly $3.75-million cost of the program would remain the same.

Ottawa Planning to Review Retail Oil Price Increases

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation to implement the new national oil-price agreement will provide a mechanism for government review of retail price increases, Energy Minister Donald Macdonald said Friday.

Asked outside the Commons if the mechanism will provide for enforcement of prices as well as a monitoring process, he told reporters: "You'll have to wait for the legislation."

A bill to implement the price agreement, reached Wednesday between the federal and provincial governments, is expected to be introduced Monday.

Mr. Macdonald said the mechanism will be an extension of the review process the government has carried on since it asked oil companies to freeze prices voluntarily last September.

It will examine price increases by refineries "from time to time to see if they are justified," he said.

Mr. Macdonald said in the House the government did not attempt to exercise price restraint on petroleum products other than motor fuels and home heating oil, until the January federal-provincial energy conference.

He was asked by David Orlikow (NDP—Winnipeg North) if he will investigate claims by industrial consumers that there were substantial price increases on oil, grease and other lubricants "during the so-called price freeze."

If the alleged violations came after the conference, he would be glad to receive data, Mr. Macdonald said.

COLOR YOUR WORLD GOES FURTHER, COVERS BETTER, SCRUBS LONGER AND COSTS LESS. HERE'S PROOF:

Sherwin-Williams' Kem-Glo — 550 SQ.FT.
Color Your World Tone-Glo — 600 SQ.FT.

The paint you buy for kitchen, bathroom and high-wearing trim areas has got a tough life ahead of it.

It's got to stand up to grease and grime. Fingermarks. Splatters. Steam. Dampness. Plus cleansers, detergents and scrubbing.

So you're probably looking for the best, longest-wearing paint you can buy. At any price.

And just in case you might overlook Color Your World's interior semi-gloss because it only costs $8.98, we'd like to show you some test results that'll change your mind.

The test methods used were those of the Canadian Government Specifications Board for semi-gloss paints.

A gallon of Kem-Glo covered 550.

Under the specifications of the scrubbability test, the enamel must withstand 500 cycles of scrubbing without a change of more than 30% of its gloss.

After scrubbing, Color Your World lost 21% of its gloss, while Kem-Glo lost 34%, failing the test.

In the applicability and appearance test, the Color Your World paint hid an "X" painted on the wall in one coat. The Kem-Glo required two coats to cover the "X".

Average regular price range:
$13.95-$16.10

Where brushed-on areas were compared to rolled-on, there was a noticeable difference in appearance with Kem-Glo, none with Color Your World.

There's another difference between the two worth noting:

Kem-Glo sells for between $13.95 and $16.10.

Color Your World Tone-Glo sells for $8.98 at a nearby Color Your World home decorating supermarket, every day of the year.

Always:
$8.98

Compare the test results. Then compare the prices.

Arts Have Their Month

By Al ZARAS
Staff Reporter

'Z' music be your pleasure, then Artsfest '74, a month-long celebration of artistic and musical talent in the Quinte area, is bound to prove pleasurable.

Sponsored by the Quinte Arts Council, three of the four events scheduled for April and early May are musically oriented. Both the Belleville Theatre Guild's production of Oliver and An Evening of Music mark firsts for the eight annual festivities.

Lionel Bart's adaption of Oliver Twist, Charles Dickens' classic, is the first big budgeted musical that has been included in Artsfest activities. Last year, financial limitations prohibited the guild from entering a musical.

Belleville's choral society and the Eastern Ontario Concert Orchestra have joined forces to provide city auditences with a single organizational entertainment this year. Since Artsfest's inception in 1967, the two groups have been scheduled for separate evenings.

Except for Move It!, a production showing off the Quinte area's youthful talent, preparations have gone smoothly for Artsfest '74. Minor organizational problems have now been overcome however, said Diana Aitken, Quinte Arts Council co-ordinating committee secretary. 'Everything is go.'

But that's not to say that the Visual Arts Display, the first Artsfest event, is less indicative of the artistry of local craftsmen and artists, says Mrs. Aitken.

"It's the big thing every year and has seen a tremendous growth and improvement over the years."

Peter Antonucci, visual arts committee chairman, agrees and adds, "Artists always have their best pieces for the show. It's a juried show and has a little more prestige than most."

Interest — from buyers from Toronto to Kingston — has been picking up, he says. But interest among school authorities is equally great.

Last year, some 10,000 Hastings County elementary school students attended Visual Arts. School buses would arrive at Ben Bleecker every 15 minutes during the four-day run. At some points, incoming students were forced to wait while those ahead moved on to make room.

Just as Visual Arts is an event children can attend, so is the Belleville Theatre Guild's production of Oliver.

Guild president Verna Patterson says, "It's a great family event in that respect. Oliver is certainly in keeping with the general thrust of other Artsfest events."

Director Liz Marshall echoes the president's words, "There's very little live family entertainment in Belleville," she said this week. "I like the idea of a musical. It's a real warm feeling one gets. I like the feeling of a large group getting together and singing. It's a lot of fun."

Quinte artists among them Trenton sculptor Tony Lassing, scheduled their work to be juried for the Artsfest '74 Visual Arts Display at Ben Bleecker Auditorium this week. One of Lassing's works, one of three sculptures, is a large rooster that sets at a weathervane. The Trenton man was the guest artist at last year's Visual Arts Display.

A Rooster for the Show

Quinte artists among them Trenton sculptor Tony Lassing, scheduled their work to be juried for the Artsfest '74 Visual Arts Display at Ben Bleecker Auditorium this week. One of Lassing's works, one of three sculptures, is a large rooster that sets at a weathervane. The Trenton man was the guest artist at last year's Visual Arts Display.

Showing Her Point

Do it this way, says Liz Marshall in both words and motion to actors during rehearsal of Oliver, the Belleville Theatre Guild's contribution to Artsfest '74. Since the beginning of March, the director has been rehearsing a cast of about 55 for the guild's production scheduled Thursday through Saturday May 2-4 at Belleville Collegiate Institute.

Cast of 55 Rehearsing For Musical Production

Oliver, the rags-to-riches story of a boy in 18th century England, has been taking shape under the guiding hand of director Liz Marshall since the beginning of March.

Lionel Bart's musical adaptation of Charles Dickens' novel, Oliver Twist, is not yet ready for presentation to audiences, but it won't be long before it marks three firsts in Belleville.

It is the first musical Liz Marshall has directed.

And it is the first musical falling under the banner of Artsfest — a Quinte Arts Council sponsored event first organized in Canada's centennial year.

It hasn't been easy, Director Marshall now starting the countdown that will bring almost four months of work by herself and musical director Frank Martin to the stage at Belleville Collegiate Institute May 2-4.

The director has been forced to place different emphasis on aspects of Oliver she normally would not encounter in straight drama.

"Music is an integral part of the show," she says, "I'll cannot be done without it."

Plans were to stage Oliver at the Pinnacle Playhouse using either pre-taped music or three instruments played live.

But once the scores arrived, such plans were scrapped when it was discovered 12 instruments were needed.

Since the playhouse is small, it presents such a cast of about 55, and a back-stage crew of another 10, could not easily be accommodated. The move to the collegiate auditorium was made.

"It has to be done that way to bring it off," Mrs. Marshall said earlier this week. "The songs are tremendously important."

Half of the musical is taken up by songs, the other half by dialogue. The latter half has background music throughout most of it, she says.

Musical backup aside, the director also must deal with a large cast — many who appear on stage for the first time. Experienced guild members are sprinkled throughout the cast.

Some 25 children are involved in the show, produced by former artistic director Ted Bairstow. Most, as has Elliot Royle as Oliver, were participants of David Baker's Children's Acting Workshop held late last year.

That experience has proved valuable for the youngsters, says Mrs. Marshall, although some still find it difficult to co-ordinate all that is required of them.

"The little ones are finding it hard to co-ordinate," she says of the 8 and 9-year-olds. "They forget the moves when they sing."

Bringing all the musical's elements together is hard work she says, but the rejoicers is in.

"I'd rather be exhausted than be cooped up at home. It's unbelievably tiring, but I enjoy it."

Voices Join Orchestra

Double pleasures are in store for Artsfest '74 audiences as horns and human voices are brought together during a single evening to produce the music of both past and contemporary composers.

Artsfest '74, the Quinte Arts Council's harbinger of spring, presents both the Belleville and Eastern Ontario Concert Orchestra during a one-evening program this year.

In previous years, though the two groups participated in the festival, each was scheduled on a separate night.

The latest arrangement should add to the musical event, An Evening of Music, organizers say. It is scheduled for Centennial Secondary School Wed. April 17 at 8.15 p.m.

Murray Irwin, choral society conductor, said earlier this week, several members of the orchestra will accompany the choir during parts of the program.

"It's a light program," he said, "There'll be no religious music. We are doing a sample of numbers from opera, and a couple from Broadway musicals."

Originally formed as an oratorio choir in 1959 by Phyllis May, at the time music supervisor of Belleville elementary schools, the choral society included secular music in its repertoire for the first Artsfest in 1967.

Since then, the choir has tried to sing work by local composers, says Mr. Irwin. During this year's program, the choir will sing a Dutch folk song translated by Ann Jasrsma of Trenton.

The 40-member choir will be accompanied by Alec Gordon, organist at Bridge St. United Church.

Stephen Choma, orchestra conductor, approached his portion of the program in a similar fashion. Diversity is the catch-word.

"I don't want to play over people's heads," says the orchestra's founder. "And I don't want to play under people's heads."

"If they hear a little Beethoven, they're educated. If they hear a little Fiddle Faddle (a work by Leroy Anderson), they're entertained."

Mr. Choma is convinced this policy has kept people coming to concerts since the orchestra's inception 13 years ago.

The 50-piece orchestra will render in part, Allegro Con Brio, from Beethoven's first symphony, Mozart's Bloomington selections, and the theme from the movie, The Godfather.

Guest artist during the evening will be baritone Rod Macionis, who will be performing a Chopsa composition, Take Care Dear Heart, to the accompaniment of piano and two violins.

Move It! Talent Showcase

All situations are go for the fourth edition of Move It!, a variety show for Quinte area teenagers, says Diana Aitken, co-ordinating committee secretary for Artsfest '74.

Committee members have pinned out scheduling problems experienced earlier this week and are now ready to accept applications for auditions from Quinte youthful talent, she said.

Audition application forms are available at main offices in Hastings County high schools. Postponed this week, auditions will be held next week, Wed. and Thurs. April 3-4 at 7:30 p.m. at Centennial Secondary School.

Conducting and directing the 1½-hour variety show will be Murray Irwin, who takes over the job from Centennial teacher Leo Rolland. Mr. Rolland said Tuesday he was forced to step down as a result of conflicting commitments.

Judging the auditioning acts will be Paul Bennett and Tony Tudin, both from Toronto. Mr. Bennett is executive director of Canadian Guild of Crafts Ontario while Mr. Tudin, a juror in 1973, is a master craftsman working in ceramics and textile wallhangings.

Aside from those juried, given special prominence this year will be the Cameron Dancers.

Donnah Cameron, an art teacher and owner of Cameron's Art Gallery west of Belleville, will be displaying work done mostly in watercolor. Her husband, Allan, will be showing traditionally oriented oil paintings — one of his wife's brother in naval uniform. Not for sale, it hung in the Royal Canadian Academy after the second world war.

The Cameron's daughter, Donnah Phillips, in her third year at the Ontario College of Art, will exhibit work in ceramics.

Being well known in Quinte, Mr. Antonucci expects the family's work will attract many to the initial event, one most popular with school children.

Nearly all pieces on display during the four-day show are for sale, he said. Letters sent to various area companies urge that company executives attend the Visual Arts Display and consider the purchase of local work.

In doing so, Mr. Antonucci said he doesn't feel that they would be compromising on quality.

Artwork Picked by Experts

Across the province, The Quinte area is becoming increasingly better known for the quality craftsmanship of its potters, said Peter Antonucci, a committee chairman of the Quinte Arts Council, this week.

To reflect and reinforce this trend, Mr. Antonucci's committee has placed further emphasis on exhibiting work from the kiln during Artsfest '74.

During the eighth annual Visual Arts Display, scheduled for Ben Bleecker Auditorium April 3-6, more exhibition space will be provided for the work of potters. Up from last year's five, potters can now submit eight pieces to be juried.

"The last two years were both good years for potters," he says. "There have been a lot of pottery schools in this area and, as a result, there are more potters."

This has increased interest as well as quality, he said, speculating that 80 per cent of pottery displayed last year was sold.

Increased emphasis on pottery will not mean exclusion of the work of Quinte painters of Hastings County elementary and secondary school students.

Between 125-140 paintings — representing the work of some 40 artists — will be juried by Paul Bennett and Tony Tudin, both from Toronto. Mr. Bennett is executive director of Canadian Guild of Crafts Ontario while Mr. Tudin, a juror in 1973, is a master craftsman working in ceramics and textile wallhangings.

Aside from those juried, given special prominence this year will be the Cameron Dancers.

Donnah Cameron, an art teacher and owner of Cameron's Art Gallery west of Belleville, will be displaying work done mostly in watercolor. Her husband, Allan, will be showing traditionally oriented oil paintings — one of his wife's brother in naval uniform. Not for sale, it hung in the Royal Canadian Academy after the second world war.

The Cameron's daughter, Donnah Phillips, in her third year at the Ontario College of Art, will exhibit work in ceramics.

Being well known in Quinte, Mr. Antonucci expects the family's work will attract many to the initial event, one most popular with school children.

Nearly all pieces on display during the four-day show are for sale, he said. Letters sent to various area companies urge that company executives attend the Visual Arts Display and consider the purchase of local work.

In doing so, Mr. Antonucci said he doesn't feel that they would be compromising on quality.

Time for Tunes

Belleville Choral Society members sing a tuneful note to the accompaniment of Alec Gordon organist of Bridge St. United Church in preparation for their participation in An Evening of Music one of four Artsfest '74 events. Loyalist Claims to Be Playing by Rules

By PETER GOODSPEED
Staff Reporter

Loyalist College Registrar Jim Hemsley is weathering a storm of controversy over the College's admission policy for the Diploma Nursing Program.

Friday the Belleville General Hospital board of governors passed a motion protesting what it called "the lottery method" used in determining admission of students to the college's nursing programs.

One board member bluntly labelled the process — including Ontario government admission criteria — "ridiculous".

The protest is to be sent other hospital boards in Ontario centres from which the college draws applicants for its nursing courses — Picton, Trenton and Campbellford.

The BGH board was the first involved health services group to react to the College's computerized selection system for nursing students.

The method stirred controversy this week after complaints that the computer selected students — whether with Grade 12 or 13 education standards — at random.

The grades education standards were set by the provincial government after nursing education was shifted from teaching hospitals — including BGH — to community colleges last year.

In their protest, the BGH governors asked that the Loyalist admission process be "changed as soon as possible" and "other qualifications also be considered" in student applications.

It urged that the situation be further discussed with the college's own Nursing Advisory Committee "so that the hospital viewpoint can be taken into consideration."

The committee composed of involved hospital, medical and community agency representatives — was organized recently to advise the college on its future operations after the education changeover.

Among the letters read to Mrs. J. E. Marsh, also a BGH governor and who also was on the selection board which screened student admissions when the latter was a teaching centre for nurses.

Mrs. Marsh said the board personally assessed the essay as significant a factor as academic standing in which student nursing applications were considered.

"We feel there is a big psychological factor in nursing and you can't take any girl that comes along and say she's qualified to be one," she said.

Simultaneously, provincial government criteria that drew no distinction between Grade 12 and grade 13 students could affect the incentive of students who are academically doing well.

"Unless things have changed you can't take ourselves seriously unless you have grade 13," she said.

Dr. John Stock queried what criteria was fed to the Loyalist computer.

"Everyone with grade 12 matriculation (standard)," replied Phillip Hustard, BGH executive director.

"The computer can be more random than any one picking a name out of a barrel," added board member John Legate. "Once accepted by standards set by the Ontario government, a name goes into the computer."

Retarded board member Enos David: "That's ridiculous."

Some reserves pondered if their protest should also carry a suggestion on what selection criteria might be discussed at other hospitals.

But, cautioned Mr. Legate: "Interference this would be contrary to provincial policy which says people with grade 12 should be considered."

Alarm Box

Friday, March 29, service call to 131 North Front Street, flooded oil furnace, no damage.

the College is playing by the rules laid down by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

The admission guidelines were received in January 1973 memorandum from L. H. E. Peebles, the director of the ministry's information branch, Mr. Hemsley said.

"The minimum entrance requirement established by the Nurse's Act is still a Secondary School Graduation Diploma (Grade 12 or Year 4) with successful standing in each of two different credit courses, in science," Mr. Hemsley said as he read from the memo.

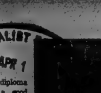
In outlining the procedure currently being used to process applications at Loyalist, Mr. Hemsley said that although the college was limited to offering 78 positions, it received over 128 applications which had listed Loyalist as their first choice.

"We looked at their academic qualifications, a minimum of Grade 12 including two sciences, then we interviewed all of the first choice Loyalist candidates. This process still left us with 128 acceptable candidates.

"In our view anyone meeting the minimum requirements and having a satisfactory interview was an acceptable candidate," said McCann the college's admissions officer said. "A ministry memo dated Feb. 1 of this year forbade us from introducing higher qualifications beyond the minimum."

Ernst Kneisel, the College's public relations officer, explained that the college chose by nursing directors to be a "random computer sample."

"In this process all of the names are listed alphabetically, beside a number. The numbers are scrambled and the first 78 numbers find out are those of the students who are accepted. The remaining 50 are on the waiting list.



"This process obviates any implication of either superiority on the part of those chosen or inferiority on the part of those rejected," he continued. "We felt this was the fairest method to all the candidates as it is free from any possible prejudice on the part of the selector."

Academic excellence plays no part in the selection process, Mr. Kneisel added, by beside a number. The numbers are scrambled and the first 78 numbers find out

"Next year's diploma nursing course has a good mixture of Grade 13 and Grade 12 students and mature students," Mr. Kneisel added.

"We even have some male students — apparently the computer has no sex bias either.

"Even though the standards at the in-take end might be broadened a little bit per se... white things or water down the course at all so that the output — the graduated — are as fully capable as the graduates we always had," Mr. Kneisel concluded.

Motion Blasts Lottery

A censure of Loyalist College computerized selection of nursing students will be circulated by Belleville General Hospital to other hospitals in the Quinte district.

Hospital Finances Make It Big Business

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

Belleville General Hospital is the fifth largest, and most critical service establishment.

It's also a core presence in the district's economy.

The proof emerged Friday in its annual financial statement — the report that defines BGH operations in business terms.

It showed: In 1973, the hospital staff of 1,000-plus, took home a whopping $7,104,000 in salaries and wages. Various benefits, from pension payments to group insurance added another $516,300.

"Aside from being a hospital that's a pretty nice industry pumping into the economy of the area," commented Carl Bateman, board chairman, as everyone reviewed the hospital's financial status.

(By comparison, the district's biggest manufacturing industry, Canada Electric, has 1,250 employees in Belleville with an annual payroll of $12 million, a company officer said.)

Salaries accounted for 76 per cent of the hospital's total operating cost — $9,372,000 — up from $9,817,000 in 1972.

The year, ended with an operating deficit on paper of nearly $200,000. Actually it's $115,560 the year before.

But the deficit is offset, on paper, by depreciation allowances of nearly $300,000. If it were a business enterprise, would actually mean a $184,782 profit.

The big salary slice was up $618,000 from 1973, reflecting various factors — pay hikes, retroactive wage settlements, at Phillip Hustard, BGH executive director. There was little increase in staff in a year when a senior government imposed financial restraints, he said.

The audit also shows how quickly money can make money. In 1973 BGH received two bequests totalling $3 million, from the estate of former, Belleville Charlotte Sills.

Banked while awaiting disposition, the fortune accrued interest $301,000. Smaller, interest-bearing legacies, brought the hospital's total endowment fund to nearly $3,265,000 after taxes.

The financial statement also showed:

— Nursing service salaries accounted for 39 per cent of operating expenses — $3,164,376.

— Hospital operating income totalled almost $10,550,000, 82 per cent of it from provincial hospitalization charges. At the bottom of the earning rung was the hospital cafeteria, contributing 1.8 per cent.

— If the hospital were up for sale, a buyer would need $14,614,418 That's exactly the total value auditors McGall and Turner assess BGH Assets.

Teachers Set Standards

The Association of Canadian Educators of the Hearing Impaired has set up a committee on professional standards to examine training and certification of teachers of the deaf.

Chairman is Henry Minte, executive director of the MacKay Center for Deaf and Crippled Children in Montreal.

The committee was formed during a meeting of regional directors of the association at Ontario School for the Deaf here. OSD teacher Garry Gervis is national director of the association.

The association, says Mr. Gervis, believes teachers of the deaf across Canada should have common certification. The association also favors placing education of teachers of the deaf in university faculties of education.

Chairman Arrives

Carl Bateman, Hastings County administrator, turned up in wheelchair Friday to preside at his first meeting of Belleville General Hospital board. Chair was necessary since Mr. Bateman is confined to home, guided by Phillip Hustard, BGH executive director, is still recovering from major back and leg injury.

Province May Suggest Nursing Home Solution

An alternative to "desperately" needed nursing home facilities in the Belleville area may be proposed by the Ontario government, Carl Bateman, Belleville General Hospital board chairman warned yesterday.

He said provincial governors there were rumors a commission of health grain care services may suggest a system different from solutions contemplated by local authorities for care of the aged and convalescent.

It was the first time Mr. Bateman provided at a board meeting since his election as chairman in January. Now recovering from major spinal surgery and a leg injury suffered during convalescence, he directed the monthly board session and subsequent annual meeting of BGH governors from a wheelchair.

During his absence the board reviewed a committee to press for more nursing home facilities to solve the estimated district shortage of 700 beds. In the interim, the provincial health ministry has commissioned a study of health care delivery in the district. The project — still underway — was also headed by Peter Gordon, a leading Halifax medical expert.

Mr. Bateman — who also is Hastings County administrator — told his board the "rumor mill has it" that the Gordon study "may be suggesting other alternatives to nursing home care".

"That's not my experience," said Mr. Bateman, "we know that some type of care for the convalescent person and the aged is needed very desperately."

The BGH board's quest for expanded nursing home facilities is based on a confident financial resource. Search for establishment of what it foresaw a much-needed service was submitted last year by a $1 million bequest specifically earmarked for a convalescent home.

Mr. Bateman's reminder of need was underlined from annual reports presented the board.

The annual summation of BGH activities in 1973 by outgoing chairman Msgr. J. P. Sullivan mentioned "the lack of nursing home beds" as among priority BGH problems.

The annual report of Phillip Hustard, BGH executive director noted an "acute lack" of such resources.

In his inaugural chairmanship session, Mr. Bateman also suggested the hospital's administration might benefit from bolstered awareness of public relations.

The board, he said, had periodically been subject to criticism "for things we're not really guilty of."

A specific instance was recurring allegations that the hospital dumping pollutants into the adjacent Bay of Quinte — claims that have drawn political inferences in the provincial legislature.

It was incumbent on the board to explain its administration to the public, said Mr. Bateman.

"But yet we don't project an image that makes the public fully aware," he cautioned the board.

Oxygen Issue Raised Again

Should county homes for the aged provide oxygen service for its elderly residents?

That was the question asked Thursday night when county Bancroft Reeve Jack Hastin, who felt that an unnecessary burden was being placed on hospitals by having to provide oxygen service for county home patients.

He felt the treatment could be provided at the hospital.

Centennial Manor administrator, Harold Caldwell of Bancroft, said this was an ongoing quarrel and was brought up almost annually at county homes for the aged conventions.

Always, however, he said, the county member services at the county homes was defeated.

County clerk-administrator Carl Bateman said he suspected the philosophy was that provincial authorities didn't want money for the aged to become glorified nursing homes.

Province Police Active

Provincial police laid charges of impaired driving against three motorists and charged a fourth with careless driving and failing to report an accident.

One of the drivers was charged after being stopped by police near Tweed, another after his car hit a rock cut south of here and sustained $2,000 damage, a third after ten gallonpoints had been knocked out at the railway underpass south of here on Highway 2.

Pay Deadlock Arbitrated

The deadlock over new salary negotiations with Belleville General Hospital nurses will go to arbitration June 27.

The date was reported Friday to BGH's governors.

Volunteers Kept Busy

Even volunteered time shounts up — more than may be realized by the beneficiaries.

Statistics given Belleville General Board of governors Friday by Lillian Ashley, president of the hospital's women's auxiliary, showed:

During March, 146 women volunteers gave 1,230 hours to their organization's various in-hospital services.

Average Patient Stay Reduced by Efficiency

Belleville General Hospital admitted exactly 10,842 patients for active treatment in 1973.

This was up slightly from the 10,783 admissions a year earlier.

Efficiency lessened the average length of patient stay from 9.27 days to 9.53 days.

Those are among the basic statistics revealed Friday to the hospital's board of governors in the annual report of its medical staff.

The report given a detailed breakdown of services provided by what has become a comprehensive regional health delivery centre.

But statistics only define a hospital's capacity for service. Human and social situations can only be conjectured, from the figures provided the hospital's various staff physicians — and their terse comments — in the report.

For instance:

Babies born in BGH totalled 1,178, up from 1,123 a year before but down from 1,304 in 1971. The smallest — and it survived — weighed 2 lbs. 11.5 oz., the largest 11 lbs.

There were 12 sets of twins, one of triplets. Some 16 women over 40 years gave birth. There were 113 mothers under 18 years, three aged 14 years.

Pediatricians Edith Polerson and James Nelles continued to observe "a low incidence of breast-fed babies", they said wryly. "Too bad."

There were 17 stillbirths, 23 perinatal deaths, no maternal deaths and six therapeutic abortions, reports J. R. Birchard, obstetrics and gynecology department head.

Mental Health Clinic admissions increased from 561 to 582. Bch. reported department head Dr. E. B. Conn. Interviews climbed from 1,930 to 2,086.

X-ray examinations rose to 28,775 from 28,831. the vast majority being outpatients.

Pathology concern over heart and related problems are reflected in the increase in electrocardiograms, 10,734 compared to 10,300 reported Dr. Barry Chodos.

Among problems mentioned in the report: The hospital's emergency department has been expanded to include outpatient services, thus easing the pressure on admissions.

But warns Dr. A. G. Allen, medical staff president, this has placed severe strain on the emergency system.

Dr. Robert Smith, laboratory medicine director, anticipates inflationary cost and supply problems in the coming year.

Outdoor Cafe Possibility For Hospital

The proposal was put to the hospital's governors Friday by Lillian Ashley, president of the hospital's women's auxiliary.

The auxiliary is already operates a coffee shop in the hospital, a popular rendezvous for visitors and staff.

But, said Mrs. Ashley, the WHA is contemplating extending the shop outside this summer to the adjoining roof.

Gerald Joyce, member of the board's property committee, said the proposal didn't appear complicated as long as say required flashing was used.

Mrs. Ashley said she would discuss the financing with the auxiliary.

Hospital Oil Seepage Nearing Elimination

Belleville General Hospital's administration will seek confirmation before installing a final solution to a nagging oil ground seepage problem.

The situation dates from the time a fuel oil tank sprung a leak. The leak was sealed, but seepage leaked through the ground and was spotted by local environmentalists in a drainage ditch leading to the adjacent Bay of Quinte.

A temporary filtering system was installed and has trapped the seepage. But it requires constant monitoring while a permanent system is produced. BGH board governor Gerald Joyce said Friday.

The permanent process, designed by a former BGH works superintendent, has been approved by provincial authorities.

But, since it may cost $18-000, Mr. Joyce said the board's property committee felt it necessary to get a second opinion from a local engineer on its feasibility before proceeding.

Meantime "there's no (oil) pollutant going into the Bay," said Mr. Joyce.

Habs Struggle to Edge Seals

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Montreal Canadiens, beset by injuries and mediocre goaltending, struggled past California Golden Seals 4-3 Friday night to pull six points ahead of third-place New York Rangers in the East Division of the National Hockey League.

The winners required two goals from veteran centre Henri Richard to secure the victory in the only NHL game played Friday night.

Richard scored the game-winner at 11:47 of the third period by tucking the puck under Seals' goalie Gilles Meloche, after Guy Lafleur had tied the count 3-3 at the 10:53 mark.

A heavy weekend schedule calls for 13 games—seven tonight and six on Sunday.

In Saturday's action, Montreal visits Los Angeles Kings; New York Rangers play Toronto Maple Leafs, New York Islanders are at Vancouver Canucks, Boston Bruins at Philadelphia Flyers, Chicago Black Hawks at Detroit Red Wings, Pittsburgh Penguins at St. Louis Blues and Minnesota North Stars at Atlanta Flames.

Sunday games include Toronto at New York Rangers, Detroit at Boston, Minnesota at Buffalo Sabres, California at Vancouver, St. Louis at Chicago and Atlanta at Pittsburgh.

Los Angeles Kings have won a spot in the playoffs but still haven't nailed down one of their goals—a third place finish.

They'll get a chance to move closer to that goal tonight when they host Montreal. A victory over the Canadiens and another Wednesday over Atlanta would enable the third spot for the Kings. They are six points ahead of Atlanta and have four games to play.

The uncertainty about the final standings put a little reservation into the Kings champagne celebration in the locker room when they clinched the playoff spot against New York Thursday.

"The best thing about it," said Terry Harper, who played on five Stanley Cup champions in Montreal, "is that they're staying the staff instead of drinking it."

Pittsburgh Penguins must win two weekend National Hockey League games if they are to keep alive their flickering playoff hopes.

It is the Flames Pittsburgh must beat and pass to reach fourth place in the NHL West, the last playoff spot. Pittsburgh is in sixth place, nine points back of Atlanta, with six games left.

The Penguins learned Friday that forward Bob Kelly, suffered a pinched nerve in his neck and will be in traction when his team meets St. Louis. He is expected to return to the squad for Sunday's game against Atlanta.

No Penalty Called Here

Nova Scotia Voyageurs, locked in a close struggle for third place in the American Hockey League's North Division, needed some heroics Friday night if they were to beat first-place Rochester Americans and gain two precious standings points. Enter Mickey Ojo, hero.

The game that ended in a scoreless draw right down to the wire when Ojo, who had left the game in the second period to get seven stitches in his chin, scored with two seconds left in the game to give Nova Scotia a 1-0 victory.

The South Division teams, meanwhile, continued their seesaw in the standings. Baltimore Clippers beat Hershey Bears 3-1 and as a result the Bears dropped from a first-place tie back to third place. Cincinnati Swords leaped into second, one point behind Baltimore and a point ahead of Hershey, on the strength of a 6-3 victory over Virginia Red Wings.

Both the remaining games Friday, Boston Braves at Springfield Kings and Providence Reds at Jacksonville Barons, ended in 4-4 ties.

Nova Scotia 1 Rochester 0

Oja used a Rochester defenceman as a screen and sent a rising shot past goalie Lynn Zimmerman to end an eight-game game to the Voyageurs' unbeaten streak. Rookie goalie Dave Ellenbaas stopped 30 shots for the shutout.

Baltimore 3 Hershey 1

The game had been tied 1-1 in the second period on goals by Steve Andrascik and Bobby Rivard. Rivard got the go-ahead goal early in the third period and Brian Murphy got the clincher with a wrist shot at 10:49.

Cincinnati 6 Virginia 3

Jim Nichols got two goals and an assist to lead the Swords over the Red Wings. Other Cincinnati marksmen were Bob Richer, Randy Wyrouh, Billy Inglis and Bill Hajt. Gene Schlick got two for the Red Wings and Danny Mackey one.

Beaten 4 Springfield 6

Boutin gained the tie on a goal by defenceman Gary Jaquith with 28 seconds remaining and their goalie. Dave Regan, pulled in favor of an extra attacker. Other Braves goals came from Bob Grgp, Neil Murphy and Ron Anderson. Springfield marksmen were Bobby MacGilpan, Scott Sargrist, Phil Hoene and Reg Kitch.

Providence 4 Jacksonville 4

John Bednarski, forged the tie by scoring twice in the last 43 seconds.

The other Providence goals came from Pierre Leganiere and Bert Wilson. Scoring for Jacksonville were Jim Graham, Glenn Sibrian, Keke Morlon and Rich Pumple.

Bears Beat Royals 4-1

LAC MEGANTIC, Que. (CP) — Des Autels scored goal of the game at 2:30 of the third period broke a 1-1 tie and Smiths Falls Bears defeated Lac Megantic Royals 4-1 Friday night to take a 3-0 lead in their best-of-seven Eastern Centennial Hockey League semi-final series.

Brian Johnson and Terry Fournier got the other goals for the Bears, champions of the Central Junior Hockey League.

Luc Bonneville scored the goal for Lac Megantic, which will be Junior A Hockey League members when they second left in the second period to tie the score.

The Bears, who defeated the Royals 4-2 and 9-0 in Smiths Falls in their two games of the series, were outshot 42-36 in the game by 2318 fans.

Referee Lucy McNulty assessed 13 minors and six major penalties in the contest.

The series resumes Sunday.

Gretzky Takes Back Seat To Belleville's Mark Crawford

By MIKE BRADSHAW
SPORTS Staff

Wayne Gretzky moved a few more closer to scoring his 1,000th goal Friday night, but even Gretzky took a back seat to Belleville's Mark Crawford.

Crawford led the way for Rollins Construction as they thumped the defending champions of the Belleville Pre-wee Shrine Tournament the Don Mills Flyers, 8-1.

Mark scored four of Belleville's six goals and assisted on the other two.

Clarence Brocksema got the first and Shawn Mulroney the last. Everything in between belonged to Crawford.

Mark was definitely the star in the locals victory, but pat f a r behind him were Brocksema, Mulroney, Kevin Meagher and Bruce McBrien. Goalie Don Cook came up with some excellent saves whenever needed.

Basically, Belleville's win was the result of a solid team effort. Players skated both ways, forechecking well and backchecking hard.

Brantford spanked Bramalea 6-3 as Wayne Gretzky tallied three goals. Gretzky's output brought his total in OMHA play to 992 goals in seven seasons.

Wayne must be conserving his talent for the tough games as he only attempted a few rushes last night, but even at that he proved he had the moves.

The real star was Brian Croley, a short spunky little forward who scored the other three of Brantford's six goals, and added an assist.

Croley, one of the smaller players in the game forechecked, backchecked and did some good honest digging in the corners.

Len Hachborn was also a noticeable player, doing some excellent hustling both ways. He had two assists.

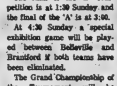
Bramalea was led by Brian Porter, who only scored one goal, but made it tough going for Brantford whenever on the ice. Dave Samson and Greg Scott got the other two Bramalea goals.

In other first round action at the Shrine Tournament, Kingston Centre 70 upset the Toronto Blues 3-2. Peterborough edged the Ottawa Voyageurs 3-2 in overtime, Oshawa blanked Georgetown 4-0, Niagara Falls shutout Kingston 2-0, Nepean beat Windsor 3-0 and Orillia defeated Brampton 6-4.

All winners advance to the 'A' competition and all losers to the 'B'.

Today's games are all being played at the Memorial Arena, the first of which is scheduled for 7:30 a.m. when the Toronto, Blues meet the Ottawa Voyageurs (B). 8:45 Centre 70 faces Peterborough (A). 10:00 Don Mills plays Georgetown (B). 11:15 Belleville versus Oshawa (A). 12:30 Bramalea goes against Kingston (B). 1:45 Brantford meets Niagara Falls (A). 3:00 Windsor plays Brampton (B) and at 4:15 Nepean faces Orillia (A).

The losers in each of those games are eliminated from tournament play while the winners go on to the semi-finals of their respective categories.



The first game of the semi-finals in the 'B' competition is at 5:30 with second game at 8:00 this evening.

In 'A' competition the semi-finals are at 6:45 and 9:15 this evening.

The final of the 'B' competition is at 1:30 Sunday and the final of the 'A' is at 3:00.

At 4:30 Sunday a special exhibition game will be played between Belleville and Brantford if both teams have been eliminated.

The Grand Championship of the Tournament will be played Sunday at 8:45 p.m.

Three City Men Are Nominated for OASA Executive Positions

Three city men have been nominated for a total of 12 positions on the Ontario Amateur Softball Association executive for the upcoming 1974 season.

The three are Cliff Belch, Jim Tebworth, and Bruce Nickle, all who have served the OASA in previous years in some capacity.

Belch has been nominated for every executive position, with the exception of Secretary. He is nominated in the positions of president, first, second and third vice-presidents, treasurer, auditor, and executive council.

Belch held the auditor position on the executive last season, after holding the job of secretary for the previous four seasons.

Tebworth, a member of the executive council for the past three years, has been nominated for first, second and third vice-presidents positions, as well as the council on which he presently sits.

Nickle, who has been active as a special convener for the OASA in their massive playoff setup for several years, has been nominated for the executive council.

Elections will take place at the OASA's 32nd annual meeting, to be held this year at the Holiday Inn in Oshawa. The Convention will be held covering three days — April 5th, 6th and 7th.

Thornhill Forces Fifth Game

MARKHAM (Special) — Thornhill evened its best of five Ontario Minor Hockey Association semi-final series with Birt's Handy Stand of Trenton here last night.

Facing elimination, the Thornhill squad rebounded from a pair of defeats on Trenton ice to polish off Birt's, 7-4.

The fifth and deciding game is scheduled for Trenton Community Gardens Sunday night at 7 p.m.

By the time the Trenton offence swung into gear here Friday, it was the third period and Thornhill led 7-1. The visitors closed out the game scoring with three consecutive goals, but it was far too little and much too late.

The winners got a two goal effort from Chris Sutton. Checking in with one each were Roger Cole, Duncan Smith, Rick Micucci, Dave Murley and Hugh Mathews.

Trenton scorers were Mark Klemenic, Bill Glover, Don Armstrong, and Geff Baker.

The losers took 13 of the game's 12 minor penalties.

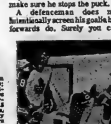
SCREEN SHOTS: ANOTHER HEADACHE FOR GOALIES

Bernie Parent of the Philadelphia Flyers and Tony Esposito of the Chicago Black Hawks are two of the National Hockey League's best goalies. But there is no doubt each feels helpless against screen shots.

The screen shot is similar to a deflection in one respect: Both are headaches for goalies. It's hard to say how many times the situation for screened shots arises each game.



For instance, when a defenceman fails to block a shot, is the goalie screened? Often, the goalie is — therefore, it's important for the defenceman to make sure he stops the puck.

A defenceman does not intentionally screen his goalie but forwards do. Surely you can picture Ken Hodge carrying the puck over the blueline then dropping it off to Phil Esposito.

In this case, the lead man (Hodge) moves toward the net or the defencemen, while the trailing attacker (Espo) uses the screen in front of him and flows towards the net.

The goalie has his vision blurred so he doesn't know what to expect. And it's important for that lead man to head for the net because if the puck hits the post or the goalie he's got a chance for the rebound.

It's a must for goalies who are screened in yell at their players. The defence should help the goalie by moving out of the way or clearing the traffic in front of the net.

Cole Leads Tourney

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — "For the last three or four years, I was a very conservative player," says South African golfer Bobby Cole. "This year I've decided to attack, have a go at everything."

His aggressive play left him with a half-dozen short birdie putts that he converted into a 68 and final 54-hole total after the second round of the $150,000 Greater New Orleans open golf tournament.

Cole, the South African Open champion but a non-winner in six years on the United States tour, had a two-round total of 134, 10 under par on the 7,066-yard course. He was one stroke in front of Larry Hinson and Lee Trevino who had 68s.

Roy Pace and Tom Watson, each with a 69, followed at 136 with Jack Nicklaus, South African Gary Player and Jim Simons at 137. Player and Simons each had a 68.

Nicklaus, who shared the first-round lead with veteran Miller Barber, bogeyed two of his last three holes for a 71.

Barber, who had a first-round 63, dropped well back at 140. He was tied at that figure with Tom Weiskopf, who had another 70, and defender Bruce Crampton, who had 72.

The only Canadian survivor was Will Hoornstra of Winnipeg who shot 72 for a two-round total of 146. George Knudson of Toronto carded 74 for 147 and Ben Kern of London, Ont., came in with 72, but had a 168 total.

U.S. Open champion Johnny Miller, winner of four titles this year, hit his game well out of bounds on the second hole, made a double-bogey and had a 74—144. He just survived the cut for the last two rounds.

Harris Moves Into Senior Semi-final

WINNIPEG (CP) — Lesley Harris, who captured her second consecutive Canadian senior ladies' singles badminton championship Saturday, pulled the biggest upset of the Canadians championships Friday to move into the senior semi-finals.

The 19-year-old Montreal native defeated second-seeded Allison Hidgrave of Vancouver, a two-time Canadian champion, 11-4, 11-8 in the quarter-finals. Harris is seeded eighth.

"I never expected to get this far because I've never done this well before in the Canadians," Harris said. "I played Allison twice last summer and lost both times.

In other upsets, fifth-seeded Judi Rollick of Vancouver defeated No. 4 seed Barb O'Brien of Ottawa 8-11, 11-8, 11-5 and ninth-seeded Sally Lee of Toronto outlasted third-seeded Sandra Stevenson of Vancouver 12-9, 8-11, 11-8.

Top-seeded Jane Youngberg of Vancouver defeated seventh-seeded Jennifer Dakin of Toronto 11-8, 11-6.

In the semi-finals today, Harris meets Rollick and Youngberg plays Sally Lee.

Top seed Jamie Paulson of Toronto won 15-3, 15-5 over Ken Little of Calgary, second seed Bruce Rollick of Vancouver dumped John Gsich of Kingston, Ont., 15-1, 15-5, Greg Carter of Winnipeg lost to third seed Wayne Macdonell of Vancouver 15-3, 15-3, and Arthur Chawia of Winnipeg was defeated by fourth seed Jamie McKee of Toronto 17-14, 15-2.

Foreman, Norton Still in Venezuela

CARACAS (AP) — World heavyweight boxing champion George Foreman and Ken Norton, the man he defeated, were hoping to leave Venemeula today while lawyers for both fighters continued an unscheduled feud with taxes arising from Tuesday's fight.

Both fighters and their aides were turned back Thursday at Maiquetia International Airport by tax inspectors who claimed that neither had paid a 19-percent tax on their fight earnings.

Most of the Norton camp, which paid $47,000 in taxes and posted a $60,000 bond Thursday, left for home Thursday night and Friday, leaving Norton, trainer Dick Sadler and a business advisor behind.

"We're not worried," said Slayton. "We're waiting for a man to come to us to make a small correction on the bond and then we should be able to leave."

A Foreman spokesman said he expected taxes on Foreman's $700,000 purse to total between $150,000 and $200,000.

A bond also was being arranged to lift an embargo on $1 million worth of television equipment belonging to Video Techniques, the New York based promoter of the fight and holder of international television rights.

The embargo was obtained by Venezuelan promotor Aldemaro Romero, manager of the Pueblo Stadium—site of Foreman's second-round knockout—to guarantee payment of a series of bills.

Gave Up 17 Hits Yesterday

Dock Ellis Says Pirates Have Pitching to Win NL Pennant

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dock Ellis says Pittsburgh Pirates have enough pitching to win a baseball pennant this year.

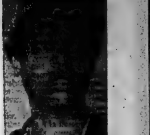
But they will have to do better than Friday when they gave up 17 hits while losing an 11-5 exhibition game to New York Mets.

Despite the Met bombardment, Ellis believes left-handers Jim Rooker, Jerry Reuss and Ken Brett can handle the West Coast teams this year.

"San Francisco, Los Angeles and Cincinnati killed us last year," the Pirates hurler said. In other games, St. Louis Cardinals beat Cincinnati Reds 5-4, Montreal Expos trimmed Detroit Tigers 7-5, Kansas City Royals stopped Chicago White Sox 5-4, Cleveland Indians stopped Chicago Cubs 4-0, Cincinnati Reds beat the Philadelphia Phillies 8 again 3-1, San Francisco Giants stopped San Diego Padres 2-1 in 10 innings.

Milwaukee Brewers trimmed Oakland Athletics 6-4, Baltimore Orioles crushed New York Yankees 7-1, Texas Rangers trimmed Houston Astros 3-2, Boston Red Sox whipped Minnesota Twins 11-7, and California Angels beat Los Angeles Dodgers 7-5.

The Mets' 17 hits included two by Ken Boswell and three by Jim Barnes. George Theodore drove in four runs with a home run, single and sacrifice out.



Jose Cruz doubled home two tying runs in the eighth inning and scored on Ken Reitz' single to trigger the Cardinals past the Reds.

Ken Fairly's two-run homer and Harry Foote's two-run triple helped Montreal over Detroit.

DOCK ELLIS

Pitcher Gary Lavelle drew a bases-loaded walk in the 11th inning, moving San Francisco past San Diego.

George Scott's grandslam homer lifted Milwaukee over Oakland.

Baltimore erupted for five runs in the fifth inning to beat the Yankees.

Boston whipped Minnesota with an 18-hit attack.

'Miracle Shots' Talk Of Mixed Curling

WINNIPEG (CP) — Ed Sleeves of Moncton and his "miracle shots" were the talk of the Canadian mixed curling championship this week as he time and again brought his New Brunswick rink from the edge of defeat to victory.

But when it came to the sudden-death match Friday for the championship, it was the lifting game that sent the 1976 Tuborg cup trophy back to Saskatchewan.

Rick Folk and his Saskatoon rink of third Cheryl Stirton, second Tom Wilson and lead Bonnie Orchard cleared the house whenever possible and scored a 9-7 victory by not giving Sleeves too many chances to practise his "miracle" shooting.

"The two rinks moved into the playoff with 11th-round victories, Folk defeating Roger Comeau of St. Albert, Alta., 8-3 and Sleeves slipping Jack Macfarlane of Northern Ontario 8-7 by stealing a single on an extra end. That left Folk and Sleeves with 9-1 records.

"They outcurled us today," Sleeves said of the Folk rink. "They were hitting well and we had quite a job to get anything in the house."

It was the house clearing by Saskatchewan that prevented Sleeves from setting up too many ends and taking points with some of the last-rock shots he produced through the round robin section of the tournament.

"The ice ran straight and true all game," Folk said. "Our game is hitting and once we get ahead, we're usually in pretty good shape."

The University of Saskatchewan foursome got ahead on the eighth end when Bert Gretzinger scored four for a 9-6 lead and coasted home.

"We just weren't up for it," Comeau said of the loss that dropped Alberta to 7-3.

Gretzinger said his Sault Ste. Marie rink "curled badly the last couple of games, but they curled today's game and probably our best one all week."

The foursome had Sleeves on the ropes through most of the game but a couple of clutch shots by the New Brunswick skip provided the win.

In other final-round games, Bob Carruthers' Charlottetown rink beat Dean Nausjer of Halifax 7-6 on an extra end, George Morrison of Killarney, Man., defeated Wayne Johnson of Winnipeg 9-6 by scoring seven on the 10th end, and Ben Funk skipped Kenora to Westminster, B.C., rink to an 8-7 win over Andre Desjardins of Kenogami, Que.

P.E.I. won its last four games including an upset win over Alberta, and B.C. had victories in the last three games to stop both their 5-4 records.

Manitoba and Ontario finished at 4-4 with Northern Ontario, Nova Scotia, Quebec and the Marty Dalton foursome from St. John's, Nfld., all at 3-7.

Leagues Sign One Year Pact

WINNIPEG (CP) — The World Hockey Association and the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association signed a one-year agreement Friday night that removes the CAHA's control of amateur hockey in Canada.

Gordon Juckes, executive director of the CAHA, said the terms are similar to those in the agreement which will be signed shortly with the National Hockey League.

The agreement stipulates that the WHA will hold an annual draft of junior players between May 15 and June 15. The WHA agrees to draft players 20 years of age and over, the same as the NHL has been doing for the last several years.

However, the agreement also contains a clause covering "exceptional players" who are under 20 years. Each WHA team will be allowed to draft one such player at the annual draft, but that player must be selected in the first or second round.

Also, if that player turns professional, the WHA will pay the amateur club a bonus of $20,000 above the amount which they must pay for all players turning professional.

Juckes said the CAHA would draw up a master draft list each year after both the NHL and the WHA have held their drafts—the top 120 players will be put on the list alternately from the two major league draft lists.

The WHA agrees to pay the CAHA $20,000 for any player in the top 50 of that list who turns professional with their league. For the next 40 players, the WHA teams will pay $15,000 for each one they sign and for the following 30 they will pay $10,000 each.

For each player after the first 120 the league will pay $5,000.

Television Ghosts

By ALLEN SPRAGGETT

Most of us know about "ghosts" on television — the fuzzy images that turn up when reception is lousy or a tube is getting ready to burn. But can a TV signal itself have a ghost?

For a while it seemed that the answer might be yes.

The mystery, one that remained unsolved until recently, started back in 1953 when somebody in England rose picked picking up on their television screen its call letters of TV station KLEE in Houston, Texas.

Now this was before satellites, remember, so transatlantic television reception was something pretty startling. But what made the people in Hanour really sit up and take notice was that the call letters of KLEE had not been broadcast for more than three years!

Station KLEE had been on the air from May 1949 to the middle of 1950, then was sold and changed its call letters to KPRC which is still going strong in Houston as Channel 2).

How, then, could somebody claim to have picked up the KLEE test signal three years after it had last been broadcast?

Could that television set in England possibly have tuned in on a signal from out of the past? If so, where had the signal been for three years — wandering around in space, bulging out some distant star, intercepted and relayed back by a UFO navies?

Engineers at Station KPRC in Houston received from England a number of photographs that clearly showed the call letters KLEE on a television screen. Accompanying one of them was a letter that said: "This photograph was taken by an ordinary box camera — what I believe is your test signal received at 3:30 a.m., September 14, 1953. Plase confirm or deny that it is your signal."

The engineers at KPRC noted that the TV image in the photos — which showed the letters "KLEE" and underneath two diagonal lines — were very similar to the actual test pattern but there were several details missing. Maybe these had somehow gotten lost in the freak transmission, or were so blurred they weren't visible.

One engineer at KPRC suggested the signal in the photos might actually be part of a Kleenex commercial that somehow blew across the Atlantic. A check, however, failed to find evidence that any such commercial had been used on that date and time by a major television outlet in the States.

The British Broadcasting Corporation heard about the case, looked into it, and said they were astumped. Engineers at the Chrysler Corporation investigated it and concluded the case was genuine — that somehow a TV image had been received three years after it was transmitted.

Reader's Digest wrote about the television signal that got lost in time. Then the story started turning up in books about UFO's and soon became a favorite of mystery-mongers.

After all, what could be more mysterious than a television signal from the past?

However, there are mysteries and pseudo-mysteries and the latter tend to shrivel under careful scrutiny. This is what happened when Dr. Frank Drake looked into this case.

Drake, professor of astronomy at Cornell University, revealed his findings at a scientific symposium at that university. The truth, he said, is that the TV signal from the past was a hoax.

It was perpetrated, he suggests by an Englishman who was trying to sell his countrymen "super" TV sets supposedly capable of picking up programs from the U.S. To prove his claims, says Drake, the hoaxer faked the test signals of several American television stations — and one in Moscow, too — and sent them photos with a request for confirmation that their call letters really had been picked up in England on his super TV set.

Obviously, when the hoaxer faked the test pattern for Station KLEE he didn't know it had circulated its signal three years before. Instead of this exposing the hoax, however as one might have expected, it was hailed as an even greater mystery.

With Dr. Drake's revelation, a phony mystery bites the dust.

Sunburn Reaction Is Like Poisoning

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Is there such a thing as sunburn nettling? I ride a tractor, and my face, neck, hands and arms act as though poisoned. They break out in a rash and itch like poison.—H.O.W.

It's a reaction to the actinic rays of the sun, although not strictly a "poisoning" as from poison ivy, chemicals or whatever. Still, you can call it such poisoning without getting much of an argument.

As I'm sure you know, people vary in sun sensitivity. Blonds and redheads burn easily; brunettes less so; but even blacks can burn if exposed too heavily.

Your rash and itching is your particular reaction—shared by a good many others, however.

I can suggest only two ways to combat it that are likely to succeed. One is to develop a tan very gradually at the beginning of the sunny season; the tanning of the skin will protect you.

The other is to limit your exposure to the sun. Protective sunburn lotions (those containing a so-called "sun screen" ingredient) should help but may not be enough.

You know where the trouble sources—the exposed skin, face, neck, hands and arms. So I'd get in the habit of wearing a wide-brimmed hat, a light scarf or maybe a bandanna for the neck, long sleeves, and perhaps cotton gloves.

Above all, try to develop a tan very slowly, starting as early in the season as possible. But you may still need the hat and other protection throughout the summer. You often see men handling tractors or doners who are bare to the waist and brown as a nut—but with heavy exposure even they can itch at times. Your solution is to limit the amount of sun you get.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I've gotten into the stupid habit of swallowing my saliva. My throat is getting sore and I just can't stop.—N.S.

If you ever broke that "stupid habit" you might be in real trouble.

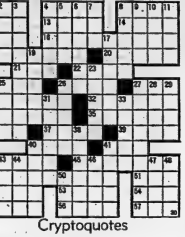
The swallowing of saliva is a very natural process. In fact it is the very beginning of the body's remarkable digestive mechanism.

Saliva contains important enzymes that help break down the food chemically for digestion further down the digestive tract. One such enzyme, ptyalin, begins the chemical break down of the starches and sugars in food.

I would look for some other cause of that sore throat. If you have excess saliva being secreted, the cause of that might be ill-fitting dentures, for example.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can alcohol and sleeping tablets be transmitted by the mother to her baby that she is breast-feeding? For example, feeding the infant an hour after taking the drug, or a drink or two of wine or cognac?—T.T.

Yes, these drugs (alcohol is a drug, too) can appear in the breast milk, so they are to be avoided by nursing mothers.



Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have heard people talking about hardening of the arteries, and that wine, liquor or beer will thin the blood and help circulation. Will a small amount of these drinks each day help the circulation?—Mrs. E. S.

Such drinks will not "thin the blood" but can perk up circulation a bit. This will not retard the hardening process, but it won't do any harm. Keep in mind that I am talking about small amounts—which is what you specified.

BIRTHS

BOTACHER, Judith — To Rick and Pat on March 28, 1974 an 8.02 lb. 2 oz. boy, Christopher Jeremy Joseph, John, Pamela and Sue are thrilled to announce the birth of their brother. Proud grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Botacher of Dr. W. E. Fry, the nursing staff at the Belleville General Hospital and Our Lord.

IN MEMORIAM

BATES — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Thomas W. Bates who passed away March 31, 1971.
The busy world is hushed,
The day is at an end,
And one more is missed.
—Ever remembered by wife Jean, and family, Donald and Betty and their children.

McCANN — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Thomas Joseph McCann who passed away on March 30, 1971.
In our hearts your memory lingers,
Always lonely, fond memories,
There's not a day, dear Father,
That we don't think of you.
—Lovingly remembered by wife Margaret and family.

MALLEY, Richard — In loving memory of a dear father, who passed away March 30, 1971.
Days of sadness still come o'er us,
Tears of memory silently flow,
For memory keeps you ever near us,
Though you died one year ago.
—Lovingly remembered, Keith and Julia.

New Brunswick Deer Plentiful

FREDERICTON (CP) — Despite a 14-per-cent drop in the number of deer shot in New Brunswick last year compared with 1972, officials of the fish and wildlife branch of the resources department are convinced that deer are plentiful.

Arnold Gray, wildlife biologist with the branch, said last year's hunters recorded killing 4,273 deer and officials had no estimate of deer killed but not reported.

Mr. Boer said weather conditions helped reduce the total kill. The woods were dry, affording the deer good cover and they stayed deep in the wooded areas instead of heading for the roadows.

"For the first few weeks of the season there were kills reported," he said. "But then he got snow for the last week and the number of deer killed skyrocketed."

Ottawa Hotel Is Condemned

OTTAWA (CP) — Plans by the National Capital Commission (NCC) to maintain the 108-year-old former Castor Hotel as an Ottawa "heritage" building appear to have failed.

The old hotel, which for the last eight years has housed two fashionable boutiques, has been judged unsafe for habitation.

The final fate of the building is not known. However, Gabriel NCC architect, said he still hopes to save it or have it restored with a replica.

But the end seemed near when the NCC employee noticed new cracks in the stucco face of the building. Three days later experts said it was unsafe. The following day the operators of the boutiques moved their stock and accessories.

The old Castor Hotel was built in 1865. For more than a century it was a familiar landmark in the Lower Town area of the city not far from By Ward market.

In 1962 the NCC took over the building and began to maintain it, as part of a plan to revitalize Sussex Drive as a commercial shopping area and preserve some of its historic buildings.

...rta Raises Royalties

Oil Firms' Share Of Boost Is Small

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Oil industry leaders in western Canada expressed disappointment Thursday over the size of the provincial government's share of the $2.50 increase in the price of oil, while their counterparts in the east pondered the impact on retail prices.

They were responding to a federal-provincial agreement to raise the price of domestic crude oil to $6.50 for the next12 to 15 months, and a subsequent announcement by Alberta of new royalty rates.

Shell Canada Ltd. spokesmen said retail prices won't jump until present stocks are depleted, likely in May, when the price of gasoline, heating fuels and diesel fuel oil is expected to jump about eight cents a gallon.

Predictions from other oil companies were similar.

Spokesmen said the eight-cent increase will cover areas west of the Ottawa Valley served by domestic crude while east of the valley, where crude is imported, the price will likely go up two to three cents a gallon.

Shell noted that when Alberta reduces provincial taxes April 1, prices in that province will drop five cents a gallon for unmarked gasoline and diesel fuels.

The retail price may be going down but exploration for new wells will suffer from this week's decision, John Peyton, president of the Canadian Petroleum Association, said in Calgary.

He said he was disappointed the province had decided to take 45 per cent of the $2.50 increase on oil sold from existing wells and about 35 per cent of the increase on newly-discovered oil.

"There's a better return on finding oil in the United States than in Alberta under the new royalties and I'm afraid investors will put their money in the U.S.," Mr. Peyen said.

The lower 35-per-cent royalty on new oil will provide some incentive for exploration, he said.

Premier Lougheed, a Conservative, has almost outdone Allan Blakeney, leader of the NDP government in Saskatchewan, for the honor of charging the highest royalty rate in the world," said Charles Dunkley, past-president of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada.

He said the royalty on new oil can be lived with, but the royalty on old oil is much too high.

In Regina, A. L. LaBerge, an Imperial Oil official, told a public meeting the Saskatchewan petroleum industry will take six months to recover losses of men and equipment following the announcement of the higher price for domestic oil.

The province, he said, is imposing severe controls on the operations of companies and this coupled with frozen prices has hindered development.

Stan Milner, president of Chieftan Development Ltd. in Edmonton, said the return to the oil industry from the domestic price increase is too low and in the long term could mean insufficient Canadian supplies and massive oil imports.

Davis Hints at Aid For Poor in Budget

TORONTO (CP) — Premier William Davis hinted Thursday at increased government aid for low-income earners and pensioners in the Ontario budget to be revealed April 9.

He was asked in the legislature by Premier Singer (L—Toronto Downsview) whether he planned to do anything for those on fixed-incomes who would be hit by escalated oil prices and what Mr. Singer termed "a shocking increase" in the cost of living.

The premier said he was cognizant of the inflationary pressures on people on fixed or low incomes.

He asked Mr. Singer to be patient. The financial programs of the government would be indicated in the budget.

The budget was originally to be presented April 4 but was postponed Thursday until April 9.

Treasurer John White said in an interview the delay was needed to give his ministry more time to study the ramifications of the new oil pricing policy.

An aide had said earlier that he didn't believe the delay had anything to do with oil prices but that the treasury ministry just needed more time to prepare the budget.

Line Held On Taxes In Quebec

QUEBEC (CP) — The Bourassa Liberal government maintained its record of holding the line on taxes Thursday when it brought down its fifth consecutive budget with no increases.

At the same time Finance Minister Raymond Garneau presented net spending estimates of $6,146,127,800, an increase of 13.6 per cent over 1973-74.

The budget, which offers assistance to low-income workers, also tries people in the lower-tax brackets from the tax rolls.

Retroactive to Jan. 1, this year single persons making less than $2,600 a year and married couples with incomes less than $5,200, no longer have to pay income tax.

The budget also provides partial relief for persons slightly above that cut-off. Increased exemptions for the aged and handicapped and an increase in $500 from $250 in the amount a spouse can earn before those earnings affect a taxpaper's exemptions.

A disturbance extending from southern Manitoba to Kansas will move slowly eastward bringing poor weather in all of Ontario by late today. Temperatures will moderate tonight or Saturday but will turn colder again over Northern Ontario late Saturday. Skies are expected to clear late Saturday or Sunday.

Macdonald Sees Dime Gas Boost

OTTAWA (CP) — Government officials estimated Thursday that retail gasoline prices may jump by as much as 10 cents a gallon west of the Ottawa Valley and by up to five cents to the east because of the new national oil agreement.

The projections came from government spokesmen after Energy Minister Donald Macdonald tiled reporters the over-all cost of the agreement to consumers will be higher than originally indicated.

But Mr. Macdonald said he has asked provinces to delay all increases until May 15—the time the government estimates it will take to use up stored supplies of crude oil.

Mr. Macdonald said after the conference that retail prices will rise by about eight cents a gallon west of the Ottawa Valley but there should be little or no change elsewhere.

He changed this Thursday to eight cents west of the line and three cents east, and said other factors such as higher production and distribution costs might result in additional increases.

He refused to speculate how much money government sources said the net retail effect could be 10 cents more in the West and up to five cents more in and east of the valley.

This was in line with one industry report Thursday that said retail prices in the West might rise by 9½ cents a gallon.

Oil Pact Is Praised By Davis

TORONTO (CP) — The compromise on domestic oil prices reached by Canada's premiers Wednesday in Ottawa "was a reasonable solution—for Ontario, and for Canada," Premier William Davis said Thursday.

"The increased price will permit rapid development of new energy resources, the lower-than-world price will maintain a competitive advance for Canadian industry, consumers in the Eastern provinces will be protected from the high cost of imported oil, the western provinces still have a hole on which to diversify their economic development."

Canadians will have a stable oil price for a least a year while the rest of the world faces uncertainty, and Canada will be spared a potentially divisive constitutional confrontation, he said.

Mr. Davis said the agreement was "one of the significant steps forward for Canada" and he gave Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau some credit.

But, he said, if the federal government had moved on the problem a year ago when Ontario suggested, "it would have been a lot easier."

Work may not be as hard as it used to be, but it's certainly a lot more taxing.

Classic Goose

Playing in a farm yard can be risky business as this little tot found out Wednesday as a goose made a direct hit and "goosed" him in the classic style. The yard, which contained several tame farm animals, was set up in a Toronto shopping centre to give children the opportunity for contact with farm animals, but the goose was thinking of other things. Brinco Sells Rights

Premier Frank Moores of Newfoundland, left, announced in St. John's Thursday the government would pay $160 million for Brinco's Labrador hydro rights and control of a Brinco subsidiary. He was flanked on his left at a news conference by William D. Mulholland, Brinco president and Sir Val Duncan, chairman of Rio Tinto Zinco Corp. Ltd., Brinco's controlling shareholder. (CP Photo)

NDP Hopes PCs Back Tax Review

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservative rejection of today's report on corporate tax concessions will decide some interesting issues, possibly even the future of the minority Liberal government.

The report, to be tabled by Finance Minister John Turner, is expected to outline the benefits of the controversial concessions to manufacturing and processing industries.

They were approved last year over the protests of the New Democrats, the Conservatives voting with the Liberals.

However, the price of Conservative support was a clause saying that Bill C-259 can receive a parliamentary review of the measures at the end of this month.

The 31 New Democrats in the 264-seat Commons already have signed up for the review but need 29 more signatures to bring it into effect. The Conservatives have said they will not decide whether to sign until they have seen today's report.

If the Conservatives decide to support a review, then find that the measures are not worthwhile, the Liberal government might be in extreme difficulty. The New Democrats, effective balance of power in the Commons, are pledged to fight any corporate concessions, under any circumstances.

Medicine Monopoly -- Lalonde

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister Marc Lalonde said Thursday that the practice of medicine is a monopoly and he thinks that having more doctors would mean lowering costs of health care is a dream.

Mr. Lalonde said that doctors' incomes had increased in recent years despite more doctors becoming available.

After a certain ratio of doctors to patients was achieved, there is little return in increasing the supply of doctors, he said.

Ontario Wants U.S. Gas Buyers To Pay More

OTTAWA (CP) — The Ontario government said Thursday United States buyers of Canadian natural gas should pay prices high enough to protect Canadian consumers against the high cost of future arctic gas supplies.

The revenues flowing from the United States could be used to subsidize cheaper prices in Canada, or to help finance exploration and development.

That was the proposal offered by D. H. Rogers, counsel for the Ontario energy department, to the National Energy Board (NEB).

The NEB has started hearings to review prices of natural gas exports.

But Mr. Rogers's oral brief was cut short by NEB commissioner C. D. Edge, who ruled that distribution of gas profits was not part of the review.

White House Meets Demand Of Jaworski

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House announced today it will provide special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski with the materials he has sought by subpoena.

Press secretary Ronald Ziegler passed this word to reporters without elaboration.

Neither the White House nor Jaworski have said what was sought in the subpoena.

Flood Death Toll Now Put at 2,000

RIO DE JANEIRO (Reuter) — Troops and rescue workers searched the debris of towns in seven Brazilian states today in the wake of floods which have killed between 1,000 and 2,000 persons and left more than 100,000 homeless.

Although no official death toll has been given, interior ministry spokesmen said it may reach 2,000 and unofficial reports put the figure as high as 10,000.

Three states, Santa Catarina, Rio Grande do Sul and Ceara, have been declared public-calamity zones.

Interior Minister Rangle Reis said the floods were the worst in Brazilian history.

Unofficial reports from the Santa Catarina city of Tubarao said the bodies of 800 flood victims were taken to the Hercilio Luz soccer stadium.

Other reports spoke of bloated bodies floating down swollen rivers, of thousands of houses swept away and of the stench of the flooded towns and villages hunting for food.

Potter Named Management Board Member

TORONTO (CP) — Premier William Davis announced the new makeup Thursday of the management board of cabinet.

Whelan Boosts Butter Price

OTTAWA (CP) — — Butter prices may rise six cents a pound Monday to about 83 cents as a result of federal dairy policy changes announced today by Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan.

He told the Commons the government has agreed to increase the support, or guaranteed, price for butter to 77 cents from 71 cents a pound and for skim-milk powder to 39 cents from 13 cents a pound.

The butter price increase is likely to be passed on to consumers directly but skim-milk powder prices are not expected to rise. They are already higher than the support price. Similarly, the price of cheese will not be affected.

Lumber: First Industry Going Strong

Uranium: Faraday Awaits Future

Uranium Prospects 'Good,' But..

Timber Still Big Bancroft Resource

By HARRY MULHALL
Staff Reporter

BANCROFT — Prospects for some day re-opening the Faraday uranium mine near here are "very good," a company spokesman said Thursday.

But W.M. O'Shaughnessy, secretary-treasurer of Consolidated Canadian Faraday Ltd. would not hazard a guess on time elements.

Faraday still is seeking a contract, but nothing is "finalized yet," he said from Toronto.

Although guarded in forecasting any opening, the Faraday official was optimistic about future prospects for the mine, east of here on Highway 28.

"The way the energy crisis is I would say they're very good," he said.

Any addition of a time factor would reduce continuing speculation in this village where natural resources still are a year-round economic stabilizer.

Lumber continues the big district resource industry, It helped found the village more than a century ago. It was still producing when the uranium boom animated heady prospects of prosperity in the early 1950s. The boom fizzled in a decade as world markets plunged and the miners left.

Lumbering still goes on, a reliable economic pillar working away even through the "boom" years. Now it enriches this north Hastings County service centre each year.

"Lumber is still the business money never lies," says Jack Brown who came here in 1940 for three months, stayed to become one of the county's leading public spokesmen and businessmen, president of Bancroft Lumber, a long-time reeve and county warden in 1958, he helped plan Belleville's county administration centre and its new hospital.

"There are 25 lumber mills in a 15-mile herehouts," says Mr. Brown. "Even more than when I came up here first."

A renewable resource, he foresees timber maintaining its own in the area economy through future years.

One nearby mill operator, Randy Freeman, perches by the lumberland on which this village nestles can keep pace with modern cutting techniques.

Mr. Brown perceives no such problem. Modern resource management and cutting methods are one precaution against depletion.

"There's lots of timber and acreage around here yet and it grows pretty fast. With proper management as man has learned how to do, acreage to keep up supplies," he says.

But uranium is a non-renewable resource and a different attitude to its eventual economic contribution prevails among community spokesmen.

The Faraday mine site has been pumped out in readiness for the day when the 1 definite may become 1 positive reality.

Last last year, when the energy crisis crunched world power prospects, Energy Minister Donald MacDonald saw "greater incentives" for Canadian mining which could mean a "bright future" for this area.

If Faraday ever reopened, estimated Mr. O'Shaughnessy Thursday, the mine could employ "250 at least."

What it's lifespan might be he couldn't say.

Mr. Brown, a practical businessman, is among those who doesn't doubt uranium again will become a Bancroft resource industry.

Miniaturization is a fundamental principle of modern technology and "no one need laugh" at the possibility that even cars some day may be 'powered by tiny reactors.

But for the local economy, uranium should be considered just "bonus."

Reeve Jack Haslin echoes the cautionary theme: "Mines have a finite term...and a community can become sophisticated at great expense. When the mines are finished the communities are left with the expense of operating a place that is less than it was — and therefore can face hardship."

Hees: Canadians Want to Work

Potter Says Municipalities Must Work Together

By COLIN BRUCE
Staff Reporter

TRENTON — Municipalities must work for the common good of their areas, and Canadians want to work, two leading local politicians said here last night.

The average Canadian is a "good guy who wants to work for a living and keep his pride," George Hees, MP Prince Edward-Hastings said. Mr. Hees was responding last night to a question from Kiwanian Ted Parker who denounced the Unemployment Insurance Commission and charged that there are jobs but people don't want to work.

"We've created a society that's quite prepared to live off anybody else," said Mr. Parker.

If workers have to get fired to apply for UIC benefits, "that's aggravated until you fire them," Mr. Parker,

Ameliasburg Not Escaping Inflation

AMELIASBURGH — Inflation is hitting Ameliasburgh township as hard as most municipalities in the country.

But the continuing rise in costs should not affect property taxes this year Ameliasburgh township official observed.

He based his presumption on the fact residential construction broke all previous records in 1973. His attitude is supported by the report that $1.5 million in new property assessment has been added to the township's tax role this year.

Council proposes to strike the mill rate this year on a total property assessment figure of $11 million. Last year the mill rate was set at 19.4 mills on a total property assessment of $10.5 million.

Council plans to devote its regular April 9 meeting to discussing township operation costs. This will set the groundwork for this year's budget.

One item for careful consideration is expenditure for permanent service for six miles of roads in various township locations. It will be one of the most ambitious hardsurfacing programs yet undertaken by the road department.

In 1973, council authorized spending $664,000 to conduct the municipality's business. Treasurer William Nightingale looks for at least a 10 per cent hike in expenditures this year.

Mr. Nightingale points to salaries and materials as being mainly responsible for his inflation prediction.

In 1974, an additional employee has been hired to expand the township's payroll to eight staff members.

Children's Swim Plan Approved by Trustees

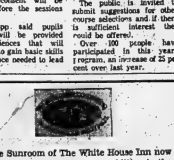
PICTON — A spring swimming program for pupils of Happy Hours School has been approved by the Prince Edward County board of education.

The eight-session program was described to trustees by school principal Florence Chivo.

She said that, although the benefits of such a program to all children, especially retarded children, are definite, sheer enjoyment would not warrant use of school time and funds.

Mrs. Clapp noted that many youngsters, although they have access to swinging facilities, lack needed basic skills and confidence.

She said the Kiwanis swimming pool in Belleville, is available for use by Happy Hours students. Cost of the pool would be $4 an hour and would be taken from the school's instructional budget.



Transportation would be provided by the board's two mini-buses on eight school days in April and May. Most of the pupils at Happy Hours would be eligible to participate in the program.

Mrs. Clapp said that several students from Prince Edward County Collegiate Institute have agreed to assist in the program to offer supervision on a one-to-one basis.

Parental consent will be obtained before the sessions are begun.

Mrs. Clapp said pupils hopefully, will be provided with experiences that will allow them to gain basic skills and confidence needed to lead fuller lives.

The Sunroom of The White House Inn now one of the dining rooms, was an addition to the house in the mid 20's, when the house was already half a century old.

There used to be a long verandah on the site where the family relaxed and refreshed themselves. People now relax and refresh themselves, while they dine, gazing out the Sunroom windows at the same firmly view, or admiring the curios and antiques in the Sunroom itself.

Whistling Swans Begin Migration

By MARGARET HAYLOCK
Staff Reporter

PICTON — A small flock of Whistling Swans has been sighted off Morrison's Point, near Milford. The sighting was reported this week by Mrs. D. W. Marcille.

Prince Edward County naturalist Terry Sprague said that there is nothing unusual in the presence here of swans at this time of year. He noted that their normal migratory route is over Long Point peninsula in Lake Erie. Small flocks of stragglers are common in the county, however, in the final weeks of March.

Mr. Sprague said that, on other occasions, flocks of swans have been sighted at Smith Pond, Wellington and Huyck's Point.

A Mute swan has wintered at Wellington this year says the naturalist. He says that this species is much more graceful than the Whistling Swan and is a descendent of the European swan seen in parks.

The Mute swan mates for life and the fact that there is only one of these birds at Wellington indicates that its mate must have been killed.

The Wellington sighted at Morrison's Point do not display the highly curved necks and backs of the Mute Swan and their beaks are black instead of orange.

Mr. Sprague said the swans probably are beginning to migrate from Ontario as they breed in the far north and usually winter in the Chesapeake Bay area.

He recalled some years ago several Whistling Swans wintered at West Lake and were frozen fast in the ice. A conservation officer attempted to rescue them but was foiled by thin ice.

He finally managed to excite the birds until their movements generated enough body heat to melt the entrapping ice.

Sentence Appealed

If ever we needed an example of a weakening of the judicial system and of the pampering of the young, the sentence of seven days in jail imposed on a 15-year-old Peterborough youth — one he says was in a case of attempting to murder a policeman — is it.

We can understand the court not wanting to lock up a youth of such tender years for long, but is this the answer? Is being permitted to go home after a week and submit to psychiatric treatment the answer?

If home produced a youth who armed himself and broke into a department store, then shot an investigating officer (three times as we recall), can we expect any marked change for the better in his behavior?

Maybe this is the correct course. Who can say. Is the soul-destroying, de-humanizing atmosphere of jail the place for a 15-year-old, let alone the others in the prison system?

For some there is certainly no other place. Many who have run foul of the law are too much of a menace to society for it to be otherwise. But there is room enough for a more humane approach — we read the other day that girls from a touring Hamilton school danced with prisoners at Kingston penitentiary. It was said the girls were frightened at first, and a psychiatrist acknowledged it was a risk. However, there were guards everywhere and all went well, one official saying that if people are treated as human beings they tend to respond in kind.

Still, is the prison system, and the cause of prison reform, ready for such radical treatment aids on a regular basis? What if something should happen? Could the prisoners themselves, a group placed on their honor so to speak, always be relied upon to be on their best behavior on such occasions?

In the Peterborough case, the Attorney-General's department is appealing the short sentence. And with justification. Whatever rehabilitation is planned, the punishment in this instance is far short of being commensurate with the gravity of the crime.

Police Patrols

How the city police force conducts its operations is largely its own business. It is public business however to the extent that local tax funds and community protection are involved and the objective should be maximum efficiency within budgetary limits.

Occasionally when we see police cars travelling in pairs, or not far from each other on a street such as Pinnacle (en route perhaps to separate patrol locations) we wonder if in the name of economy and efficiency are being best served. Approaching Zwicks Island on Wednesday two cruisers were noticed emerging from the park entrance. As the second of the cruisers parted company, one heading toward town, the other westward.

So why does Zwicks Island require the attendance of two cruisers around nine in the morning? They were there again Thursday morning, parked by the phone booth.

Quitting Politics

Dr. Morton Shulman's announcement that he will not run in the next election is a loss to provincial politics.

The New Democratic Party member, former Toronto coroner and millionaire (he is author of a book called Anyone Can Make a Million) is one of the most colorful figures on the Ontario legislative scene.

Never one to shun controversy, Dr. Shulman, in and out of politics, always said his piece without fear or favor. He was not always right, but then who is, in or out of politics, and the legislature and the public cause to respect him.

Without Dr. Shulman the legislature will be less interesting, perhaps a shade less effective an arena too, when his own peculiarly brand of opposition and zeal more for matters he feels need righting are gone.

'Humanitarian Aid' for Africa

Church Demonstrates Growing Political Involvement

By JOHN D. HARRISON
Foreign Affairs Analyst
Thomson News Service

The impetus behind the controversial Ottawa plan to stop "humanitarian aid" to African liberation movements, began not with the Canadian government but several Canadian churches.

Aid to African guerrillas which would be given by Ottawa through the churches as third party recipients, has brought to wider public attention the growing politicization of the churches in Canada and in particular the United and Anglican churches, within the World Council of Churches.

The Roman Catholic Church hierarchy per se does not condone African liberation movements as the Anglican Church of Canada is currently doing through Archbishop Ted Scott, with the Canadian Ecumenical Institution to the struggle against racism and colonialism throughout the Third World is made through such bodies as The Committee for Development and Peace.

At the senior administrative level, this political involvement of Canadian churches is extensive, though the quiet majority of rank-and-file Anglicans or United Church members opposed to the radicalization of their churches have so far not responded to this development.

A few days ago Anglican Archbishop Ted Scott wrote a long letter to the Toronto Sun, a strong opponent of the churches' new political position, outlining with surprising frankness why his church is taking its present course on "humanitarian aid" to African liberation (or "guerrilla) movements.

Somewhat earlier the official monthly tabloid of the Anglican Church published photos alleged to show the purported beheading of a Mozambique guerrilla by a Portuguese officer.

Nowhere is the concern felt the editor of this church publication was the word "alleged" (used by the New York Times when it published the identical propaganda pictures last year). Consequently the same editor is unaware this same photo has been used on dozens of African guerrilla movements several times since 1969.

It has appeared in French and German magazines and posters. Our magazine in West Germany's Der Spiegel, Prairie's Farm Magazine and finally the atrocity took place in Angola not Mozambique.

This kind of politicized and sloppy journalism, plus the strongly leftwing political advice being given and accepted by the Anglican Primate and United Church Moderator from small coteries of ministers fascinated with the "ideology of liberation," suggest church leaders in Canada are involved in a dark area best left to others.

Where the guerrillas' weapons are concerned, the Anglican Primate and United Church Moderator remain supremely naive. They are now faced with the knowledge that the IRA Provisionals in Ulster, the African guerrillas (to whom they will give "humanitarian aid") and the Libyan-supported Palestinian terrorist now all have identical Soviet weapons.

The most recent and by far most deadly of them is the Soviet RPGT manually-operated missile. It was first revealed in Mao Tsu's Yom Kippur war when individual Egyptian soldiers used it to knock out the big Israeli tanks.

Since the world's terrorist organizations now have unified weapons supply, how they unified in other combats ways not known to our churches and for roles which have absolutely nothing at all to do with the Master of Galilee.

Opposition Shafts Are Getting to the P.M.

By RICHARD JACKSON.

OTTAWA — It is not like it used to be for Prime Minister Trudeau in the House of Commons.

There was, not so long ago, that he had it under control.

The Opposition, baffled by his style, new and different for Prime Ministers, did not know how to handle him.

He got to both the Conservatives and the New Democrats with his studied flippancy, laughing at their frustrated efforts.

There but for the grace of Pierre Trudeau." NDP Leader David Lewis has hallowed it ever again, "sits God."

If the Prime Minister was not in the mood to answer a question he might stick out his tongue, as he has done at one of his most persistent inquisitors, Eastern Ontario Conservative MP George Hees.

Other times he would simply ignore it, shuffling the papers on his desk in an appearance of concentration.

Or, if the questioners stubbornly insisted on some sort of response, he would shrug and throw up his hands in a "how-can-I-stand-this-idiocy" gesture. But not any more.

The Honorable Members of the Opposition are finally getting to him.

They use ridicule, heavy and constant interruption all calculated to throw the Prime Minister off balance, upsetting him into a state of irritated confusion and preventing him giving the reasoned answers that might offer an acceptable government defence or even explanation.

Like the other day when they were giving him on inflation and the runaway cost-of-living.

Condensed, here is the way the interrogation went when both the Conservatives and New Democrats took out after him on the soaring cost of living like hounds running down the fox.

Conservative Leader Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is going to invoke his so-called (prices) contingency plan.

The Prime Minister: The government is very concerned about rising prices, particularly the fact that 60 per cent of the increase in the cost of living is attributable to food. And we do know that the quarterly report of the Food Prices Review Board will include a review of beef prices.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think it is very gallant of the Prime Minister to hide behind the skirts of Food Prices Review Board Chairwoman Mrs. Beryl Plumptre.

An Hon. Member: Get out from behind that woman's skirts.

Another Hon. Member: It's getting kind of crowded back there.

Another Hon. Member: Consumer Affairs Minister Herb Gray is there already.

Another Hon. Member: And she's quite a slender girl, remember that.

Another Hon. Member: Pierre the twister.

The Prime Minister: I want to say that the very day questions were posed (about beef prices) I cut out of the newspapers, and I can show the Leader of the Opposition....

Mr. Stanfield: Whether you, you read the newspapers now. (Presumably the Prime Minister frequently made a point of insisting he never had the time to waste on reading newspapers.)

An Hon. Member: Get your parents to write a letter.

An Hon. Member: Are you sending a scrapbook.

The Prime Minister: As to (some) Hon. Members know, I spend three days a week now looking at newspapers.

An Hon. Member: And that is all you are doing, obviously.

The Prime Minister: There is a bill (relating to food supply and prices) before the House today.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come off it.

The Prime Minister: Hon. Members will see in it that we are beginning to put into practice the reform announced in the Speech from the Throne.

An Hon. Member: That's what worries us.

On paper it all sounds reasonably sensible. But sprinkle it with "shames," and "lies," and "distortions," and "shut ups," and continuous "oh, oh" which is Hansards traditional coverup for the slow acceptance and you get a roaring row that frustrated Infuriates the Prime Minister, demanding $50 a month rent — another annual $600 which is taken from the United Way, but "doesn't seem to be". Such financial wizards!

Directors continue year after year with an apathetic and unembellished community apathy and shelving each UCS action. And you, Mr. Editor, accuse those concerned members who speak out of "egotism" and "head-rocking". In some situations your kind could correctly be termed the "Stone Mountain" use of the Citizen's Lobby think of you as a cur of UCS director's alienating the UCS Wonderland.

F. HENDERSON

Editor's Note: Sir, a lobby is a lobby — with its own built-in bias by principle. Nobody has all the answers. The editorial UCS? Never. Did not exhibit any special brief for the UCS but rather suggested, constructively we believe, that in this new phase, under a new administration of offices it should be given a chance to run a more efficient operation. The way things are going, however, it is fast being turned into a political football.

Retirement of Lieutenant-Governor

TORONTO — Many fine men have acted as the representative of the monarchy in Ontario.

But there can be few who have enjoyed the great respect and admiration which has been given to Lieutenant-Governor W. Ross Macdonald.

As he leaves office this 67-year-old Brantford lawyer takes with him not only the respect but the affection of the thousands of people he has so graciously hosted or visited in his nearly six years in office.

Perhaps the most important reason for Mr. Macdonald's success has been that he obviously has enjoyed his job.

This has been very evident at the continuous round of social functions at which he has been host.

The person having the best fun at these always appeared to be Mr. Macdonald himself.

He was always gay, charming and appearing to be having a great time.

He has been a most entertaining speaker, with normally a few light touches to set a tone of fun, yet also always with dignity.

The respect in which Mr. Macdonald was held was demonstrated when the government held a dinner to honor him at the Ontario Science Centre.

There was an attendance of more than 500, including some of the most prominent people in the province.

And there was an atmosphere one doesn't too often find.

There was an affection one could feel.

This was not a gathering at another party, "another compulsory social occasion, but a group gathered to express admiration for a man truly admired.

It was a most notable occasion.

Incidentally Premier Davis showed thoughtfulness in arranging that the hands of Mr. Macdonald should be sculpted.

One is to be placed in the high school named after him in Brantford, And the second will be displayed in the parliament buildings.

This is a new honor. It has not been done for any previous lieutenant-governor.

But it is a very fitting one.

For in this man Ontario has enjoyed the finest of public servants.

Gordon Mullin must be a very courageous individual in accepting the professional leadership of United Community Services at this time. He has a most difficult job ahead of him when he starts. It, therefore, behooves all of us to give him a warm and sincere welcome when he gets here.

If UCS is to once again be the vital organization it has the potential of being, it will require more than good wishes. As Mr. Mullin will roll up his sleeves, it will be essential that there be a coterie of citizens at his side.

The community is indeed fortunate that Virginia, O'Rourke has assumed the presidency of UCS. It is only too bad that she did not do so a year ago. If there is any hope for the future, it is because she is at the helm.

For the time being, UCS will has the two-pronged job of United Way fund raising and social or community planning. Until this is changed (which the undersigned urges should be in the not too distant future), one aspect should not be neglected in behalf of the other. I am certain that Mrs. O'Rourke understands this full well.

UCS at this juncture needs co-operation and good will — not carping. If we all will it, it will not be a legend.

Recently community members, by their letters on the Editorial page, have been accused of "rocking the UCS boat".

This organizational vehicle is a community anachronism. Time and again UCS has duplicated the mistakes of past years only to have to "bury" its mistakes with well-meaning sations and empty promises. Two Executive Directors have "bitten the bullet" and a third soon will also. The cardinal error of UCS directors is alienating themselves to be carried away with their delusions of grandeur. The United War campaign is moderately successful but UCS' performance in the field fell this effort, mainly of community organization. The building is useful to worthy community service groups, but if you can't be real, you may as well you go on your ear. Even in the administration of its offices UCS demonstrates the "Alice in Wonderland" quality of its actions. Why not, for example, have the United Way fund to the Central Volunteer Bureau and then

United Community Services

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

Gordon Mullin must be a very courageous individual in accepting the professional leadership of United Community Services at this time. He has a most difficult job ahead of him when he starts. It, therefore, behooves all of us to give him a warm and sincere welcome when he gets here.

If UCS is to once again be the vital organization it has the potential of being, it will require more than good wishes. As Mr. Mullin will roll up his sleeves, it will be essential that there be a coterie of citizens at his side.

The community is indeed fortunate that Virginia, O'Rourke has assumed the presidency of UCS. It is only too bad that she did not do so a year ago. If there is any hope for the future, it is because she is at the helm.

For the time being, UCS will has the two-pronged job of United Way fund raising and social or community planning. Until this is changed (which the undersigned urges should be in the not too distant future), one aspect should not be neglected in behalf of the other. I am certain that Mrs. O'Rourke understands this full well.

UCS at this juncture needs co-operation and good will — not carping. If we all will it, it will not be a legend.

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

Recently community members, by their letters on the Editorial page, have been accused of "rocking the UCS boat".

This organizational vehicle is a community anachronism. Time and again UCS has duplicated the mistakes of past years only to have to "bury" its mistakes with well-meaning sations and empty promises. Two Executive Directors have "bitten the bullet" and a third soon will also. The cardinal error of UCS directors is alienating themselves to be carried away with their delusions of grandeur. The United War campaign is moderately successful but UCS' performance in the field fell this effort, mainly of community organization. The building is useful to worthy community service groups, but if you can't be real, you may as well you go on your ear. Even in the administration of its offices UCS demonstrates the "Alice in Wonderland" quality of its actions. Why not, for example, have the United Way fund to the Central Volunteer Bureau and then demanding $50 a month rent — another annual $600 which is taken from the United Way, but "doesn't seem to be". Such financial wizards!

Directors continue year after year with an apathetic and unembellished community apathy and shelving each UCS action. And you, Mr. Editor, accuse those concerned members who speak out of "egotism" and "head-rocking". In some situations your kind could correctly be termed the "Stone Mountain" use of the Citizen's Lobby think of you as a cur of UCS director's alienating of the UCS Wonderland.

F. HENDERSON

Editor's Note: Sir, a lobby is a lobby — with its own built-in bias by principle. Nobody has all the answers. The editorial UCS? Never. Did not exhibit any special brief for the UCS but rather suggested, constructively we believe, that in this new phase, under a new administration of offices it should be given a chance to run a more efficient operation. The way things are going, however, it is fast being turned into a political football.

Obscene Language Issue

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

The article entitled "Language Issue" by Mrs. Dorothy Lane appeared in the paper recently has prompted me to write.

I would like to express my concern, especially for the reported "emotional" dismissal of the case. If this is true, then it would be very disheartening for our police officers attempting to carry out their duties of enforcing the law.

Is it really true? Is this the "prevailing moral standard"? Who says?

Is there really a "prevailing moral standard" — perhaps it is, because there seem to be many things "prevailing" these days. Everyone would then have an opportunity if they wished to do what "prevailed" — from murder to maybe drinking their coffee black.

A more serious thought to me is that in how many Canadian many assist in destroying this young man and someone else. If he is guilty, then it might be a bullet he spews forth instead of obscenities.

I'm certainly grateful my child is old enough to read that it is okay to verbally abuse an officer of the law today because it doesn't "run contrary to the prevailing moral standards" as they would say!

It's interesting to note that what was not considered obscene language a few years was not considered appropriate to be printed in newspapers for everyone to read, and in such a small space too!

A MOTHER

* * *

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

The dismissed obscene language charges reported in your Intelligencer article I understand was a fairly accurate account of the case, raises a serious point in my mind.

Does our judiciary actually believe that the moral standards of the majority have become so low as to accept as a public place the type of language presented by the accused? It is beyond my comprehension to believe that this could be the case, however we are told the Crown failed to show that the language used ran contrary to prevailing moral standards".

I cannot accept such a decision made on my behalf and I am sure the majority of my objection.

I for one, am not going to be happy when our less informed youth begin to make full use of the obscene occurrence on our streets as a result of the decision made by the article referred to above.

Potter Property Purchase

Editor,
The Intelligencer.

The purchase of the Potter property at a cost of $770,000 is scandalous.

It makes little difference how the figures regarding cost sharing are juggled - it will still be the most expensive trailer park in the province of Ontario. All due to service a handful of people sleeping overnight outside the city limits.

Mayor Jeffrey calls it "visionary," I call it criminal.

The entire Metro Conservation Authority exercise is another with those members of Belleville council who voted for this totally unnecessary and extravagant waste of public money should be removed from office.

Help! Of to Alderman Zagouras. Maybe he can find a way of telling it like it is.

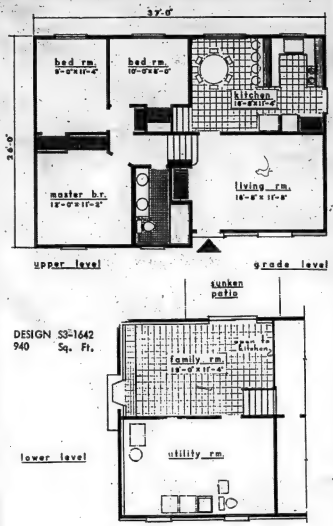
Home of the Week



There is a good deal of interior living area in this small tri-level design. Modern living concepts are evident in its planning for the young and the young-in-heart.

Family kitchens are replacing the separate kitchen and dining room especially in small homes and as part of this feature, a snack bar has been included as an extension of the U-shaped counter. The lower level family room is open to the kitchen area with only a wrought iron railing between — another modern touch, particularly attractive to mothers with young children. From the family room there are glass doors to a sunken patio.

The cantilevered upper floor adds extra space to the three bedrooms. Roughed in plumbing has been planned for a washroom on the lowest level. This home needs only a 50 foot lot, 45 feet in many jurisdictions, as it is only 37 feet wide. Design 53-1642V is similar, but larger at 1045 sq. ft. and it has a garage as an extension of the living-kitchen wing.

Plans for Design 53-1642 are $35 for the first set, $11 each additional set and are supplied by return mail. Two new books "Home Designs for Canadians" are available for $1.00 each by mail (see coupon below). Book 1 presents designs for homes up to 1600 sq. ft. for 1 storey and split level, 1850 sq. ft. for one and one half and 2 storey. Book 2 includes larger homes and vacation homes. (Ontario residents add seven percent Sales Tax to all purchases).

Whelan Assailed As Cattle Cheaper

OTTAWA (CP) — The government may soon modify its besieged beef subsidy program in an effort to shore up sliding cattle prices, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan indicated Thursday.

He said he will announce, possibly today, whether or not the government will alter the two-week-old program. But he refused to bend to demands by cattlemen that the $2.75-million-a-week program be scrapped completely, and as quickly as possible.

"We just want to be rid of the thing," Ken Parks, president of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, said prior to a private meeting with Mr. Whelan. If it had to stay, it should be extended to cover all grades of beef.

Meanwhile, opposition to the program continued to grow as cattle prices moved lower on many of the country's markets.

Cattle prices had dropped to between 39 and 40 cents a pound from roughly 47 cents a pound before the program was announced, thus wiping out all advantages to farmers.

Millhaven Troubles Called Symptomatic

OTTAWA (CP) — A Conservative MP said Thursday troubles now plaguing the maximum security institution at Millhaven in the Kingston area are symptomatic of what is happening in the Canadian Penitentiary Service.

Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East) said a tour by a subcommittee of the Commons justice committee last year found low morale among corrections officers in institutions across the country.

He said this applied particularly at Millhaven, where there was tension and hostility be-

OTTAWA (CP) — Extension of the Veterans Land Act was given final Commons approval Thursday night, but the two men mainly responsible for it say the fight has not ended.

Jack Marshall (PC—Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) and Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre) want the act to be more flexible and say they intend to renew their campaign when the veterans affairs committee discusses departmental estimates.

Topless Crackdown Report Was in Error

TORONTO (CP) — The Liquor Licence Board of Ontario is going to "take a good, hard look" at topless dancers and waitresses in Ontario dining rooms and dining lounges that serve liquor, Tom Gilday, a member of the three-man board, said Thursday.

He said in an interview that the board wants to find out "how bad the shows are" before any crackdown is contemplated.

Earlier reports that nude and topless dancing in licensed dining rooms and lounges had been banned by the board were not true, he said, and resulted from "a poor directive" by the board that was misinterpreted by inspectors.

Some inspectors took the directive "too much to heart" and told operators of lounges featuring topless entertainment that they would be closed down if the acts weren't eliminated, Mr. Gilday said.

Hog Producers May Get Help

OTTAWA (CP) — Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said Thursday he has had representations from hog producers concerned about rising costs, but he is "not prepared to say what we're going to do."

Plight of Retarded Is Being Considered

TORONTO (CP) — Rene Brisebois, minister of social and family services, said the government won't decide for several months whether parents will be asked to pay partial costs for education and care of the retarded and with the local their mentally retarded chil associations."

He told Opposition leader Robert Nixon in the legislature Thursday a decision will be made only after "full consultations with the parents of children.

EXTRA
It's no news to anyone that right now a small car is a better idea than ever.
And right now a Toyota is a better small car buy than ever.
A recent survey of small car buyers in Canada showed that the two things uppermost in their minds when they went shopping for a small car were: (A) Price, and (B) Gas mileage.
Which should go a long way towards explaining why more Canadians buy Toyotas these days than any other small car. In fact, the Toyota Corolla is one of the 10 best selling small cars in Canada. And one of our Corollas, the 1200, is not only the lowest priced of any model of the top ten best sellers, it's also the one that goes the farthest on a gallon of gas.
The burning question: how many miles to a gallon?
In the U.S., a government body called the Environmental Protection Agency tests cars to determine their gas mileage figures. The E.P.A. people are thorough, finicky, and tough. They have to be. And the chart below shows you what happened when they posted the mileage figures for some of the top selling small cars. (Of course, your own mileage may vary depending upon road conditions and the way you drive.)
Small car mileage chart.
Best mileage attained by each manufacturer on Miles per mpg gal.
Miles: 0 5 10 15 20 25 30 35
Toyota Corolla 1200 — 32.5 mpg
Datsun B210 — 29.0 mpg
Vega Hatchback — 29.5 mpg
Pinto — 27.4 mpg
Volkswagen (Beetle) — 25.2 mpg
Some big car mileage figures. Read 'em and weep.
You may not be completely aware of the kind of mileage you're getting from the car you presently own. Just for the record, we've listed below some of the E.P.A. registered figures (converted to Imperial gallons) for some popular big cars.

Ford Torino 302 V-8	14.2 mpg (Imp. gal.)
Chev Impala 350 V-8	12.1 mpg (Imp. gal.)
Pontiac G.T.O. 350 V-8	10.7 mpg (Imp. gal.)
Ford Gallaxie 351 V-8	12.8 mpg (Imp. gal.)
Plymouth 360 V-8	12.5 mpg (Imp. gal.)
Mercury Mont. 351 V-8	10.9 mpg (Imp. gal.)

SOURCE: Environmental Protection Agency. Based on 1974 models equipped with standard engine and transmission. Actual gas mileage figures may vary from those listed.
But remember, rushing out to buy a small car just because it's good on gas may be a big mistake. Our advice is that if you're going to be stampeded into a small car, the chances are you're going to be unhappy with it right from the start. A small car should represent a rational, intelligent alternative for you, not a desperation move.
Most small cars are inexpensive to run. But not all small cars are inexpensive.
To our way of thinking, spending a lot of money for an economy car defeats the whole idea. Economy should start right in the showroom. (And if you're used to big cars with big price tags, brace yourself. A Toyota Corolla could represent half, or even one third what you're used to spending for a big car). But most important of all, of the 10 top selling small cars on the market, Toyota has the lowest priced model. It's the Toyota Corolla 1200KB. And it's lower priced by far. Here are a few examples of leading manufacturers' lowest priced models:

Model	Displacement c.c./Std. H.P.	Lowest Priced Model (Transmission)	Difference
TOYOTA	1200/65	$2,499 ...	...
Vega	2300/75	$2,789	$290 .
Pinto	2000/*	$2,825	$326
Datsun	1300/*	$2,965	$466
VW	1600/46	$2,995	$496

*Not H.P. figure not available.
Manufacturers suggested list price. Does not include delivery and destination charges, taxes, license, optional equipment and dealer freight. Prices may vary slightly in Maritime provinces and Territories. Prices subject to change without notice.
Our Mark II, for example, even comes with power steering and an AM/FM radio as standard equipment.
Our Corona has been totally re-engineered with safety in mind; the two hand-top models features an overhead panel that alerts you to a potential hazard. (It's called ESP, for Electro Sensor Panel, and it's the most advanced innovation you'll see on any car, big or small.)
If it's power and performance you're looking for, take our new Celica GT for a test drive. We think you'll be as surprised as some automotive writers were when they found how well it handled.
We can even offer you a low-priced Toyota Corolla SR5 that comes with a 5-speed transmission, tachometer and radial tires as standard equipment.
You're not losing a big car, you're gaining half a garage.
Small cars have always made sense, today they make a lot more sense.
We think small cars are the cars of the future. So we've got a pretty big stake in which one you choose right now. We figure that if your first small car is a Toyota, it won't be your last.
And remember, of the best selling small cars, Toyota is number one.
So when it comes to low price and great gas mileage, not to mention the most standard equipment and widest choice of models, see your Toyota dealer.
Most importantly, see him first.
That way, think of all the gas you'll save by not having to drive around to all those other dealerships.
More features. More models.
Some small cars offer you only the bare necessities. But not us. Even on our lowest priced models you'll find extras that are extra elsewhere. (We give you front disc brakes and reclining bucket seats for instance. Many other small cars charge you for them.)
You don't have to give up comfort, performance and power either. We have 22 models to choose from (including 2 pick-up trucks and two 4 wheel drive Land Cruisers) and one of them is exactly what you think a small car should be.

Kitty and Bernice, Variety Store Clerks

At McKnight's Variety you can buy a pipe or get your shoes shined or replay last week's Bobcats game.

It's been a Front Street gathering place for 40 years, a sort of city "country store" as Kitty McKnight put it.

These days it's Kitty and Bernice Lewis who take care of most of your needs at the one-time cigar store where Vernon McKnight worked for 37 years. Now the McKnights own the shop and run it with Mrs. Lewis' help. It's almost a family business for Mrs. Lewis, too, since husband Tom used to own it. She's worked there 14 years "on and off".

In the winter, Kitty and Bernice sell a lot of coffee. In the summer it's ice cream along with thousands of other variety store items.

But the endless stream of customers who visit the shop from its 7:30 a.m. opening to 9 p.m. closing come not only for magazines and hockey tickets, soft drinks and pocket combs but for some friendly discussion.

Bernice and Kitty both like the easy-going atmosphere where people hang around to talk.

"All we need is a pot-bellied stove," Kitty says.

Kitty's been serving the public one place or another in Belleville all her life, spending 14 years at Ashley Furs and stirring her retail sales career at the old Front St. Loblaw's from the time it opened.

Working with people has been what's kept Bernice coming back along with "my great bosses".

And the two women really enjoy after-game discussions when, Kitty says, "they play the game over twice right here."

OUR CITY ON THE RAY: 1909

Photography, though an art, is also a science and a means of communication."—Gene Thornton.

* * *

"Do you mind taking a picture of our group with this camera?"

The young man, a near by-stander, gallantly complied. He was given detailed instructions, and snapped our pictures as we all said "Cheese."

"Nice camera," he remarked as he handed it back. Later in the restaurant where he joined our party over coffee, we learned our benefactor worked for a camera firm.

"I've just attended an excellent exhibition held at the Smithsonian Institution's new Hall of Photography in Washington, D.C., he said. "It covered amateur as well as professional photography and showed how photography has come to be — at least before television — the principal and prevailing form of visual communication in our time.

He spoke modestly but with enthusiasm, and immediately interested each of us.

"Is photography a science?" someone asked of him.

"That photography is by science is made possible by technical exhibitions. One of the largest is held annually in Cologne, Germany, with three factors that set it apart: its sheer size; its cosmopolitan flavor; the presentation of photography as an organic whole, from its latest tools and techniques to their end result in the form of vital editorial display," he answered without hesitation.

"Is it an art?" asked another.

"I'll pointed out that while many worldwide photographers feel obliged to depict turmoil and strife to bludgeon public inertia in humanity's sorry condition concerning its rights and welfare, some there are also dedicated to devote their efforts exclusively to beauty. Concerning this approach, one photography teacher of mine says:

"The people who aide for us-ing the lens to create beauty will provide balm that helps heal our wounded hearts. In my opinion, there is no cause more worthy than this — and it is the one to which the truly great artist — in all media — are dedicated," and I well agree," he concluded.

Was photography well-known, popular, say around 1909, in our city? Looking through The Daily Intelligencer's Special Industrial Souvenir number of that year, is the following:

"While there are many engaged in the art of photography, there are comparatively few matters.

In Belleville Mr. W. S. Carter stands as the best representative of this art. Centrally located in a spacious three-storey brick building at 250 Front Street, Mr. Clarke's studio is fitted with every modern convenience, and equipped with large handsomely furnished reception and reading room, beside dark and operating rooms and gallery, fitted with new and improved scenery and apparatus.

Everything in appliances and materials is entirely up-to-date and the most modern methods are employed in producing high class pictures.

Mr. Clarke keeps in touch with the latest ideas by attending the National Convention of Photographers of America.

Artistic framing is also done as well as developing and printing for amateurs. Mr. Clarke has been in the photograph business in Belleville for over twenty years, and there is no name more prominent in this line in Belleville today."

"...and lacey-edged patches of frozen snow lay as "cut-outs" of a puny-cat, a playful poodle, a tiny mouse, on the lawn."

Another Doris.

Ann Landers

Child of Broken Marriage 'Glad My Folks Divorced'

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 13-year-old girl who has something to say to a lot of kids who are in the same spot I'm in. My parents are divorced.

I'm the youngest of four kids. We all live with Mom, but we see Dad every other week and write him letters whenever we feel like it. This might not be nice to say, but I'm glad my folks got a divorce. When Dad was home he and Mom fought all the time and it made us kids very nervous. Mom had headaches and Dad had stomach aches. Now they both feel fine and treat each other like friends instead of enemies.

Us kids feel better, too. My little brother has stopped stuttering and I don't shake like I used to when I was afraid my dad might lose his temper and slap my mother.

So, kids, if your parents are separated or divorced, it probably means they had to do it for their health's sake, and for yours, too. So cheer up and don't feel sad.—I Understand

Dear I.U.: For a young lady of 13 you have a beautiful set of brains. Congratulations on figuring things out so well. I hope your letter helps other kids who are walking in the same moccasins.

Dear Ann Landers: May I comment on the letter from the senior citizens date file for her, early 70s for him) who found love the second time around. Oh, how glorious it was! No worries about pregnancies, no troublesome kids, no burning desire to corner all the money in the world—it sounds divine. So my old gent hands it to me and says, "See Ann Landers approves of what I am doing."

Well, what he is doing (after nearly 30 years of marriage) is chasing every widow and divorced woman in town. I'm not saying he is catching many, but it's not for lack of trying. He insists that just because I am worn out and disinterested in sex he has be right to enjoy himself if he feels like it.

Don't suggest divorce. I couldn't face it and he doesn't want it. I can still cook, do his laundry and keep the house clean.

I wrote to you a while back saying some women lose interest in sex after a hysterectomy. Your medical experts said most of the problem is in the head. Well, wherever it is I have it, and I resent being told I am nuts.

Furthermore, if a couple loves each other, it shouldn't make any difference if they have no sex after 55. They'd still have respect and companionship. I dare you to print this. Frenzied.

Dear F.: That dirty old man you are married to got no O.K. from me to run around. Those senior citizens who were having a ball chicking love affair were a couple of long-time friends who had had their mates and were soon to be married.

Some women do lose interest in sex after a hysterectomy, but it is largely an emotional problem and not physical. (The lost estrogen due to the removal of the ovaries can be replaced by medication.)

You are right when you say that if a couple love each other they can still have respect and companionship without sex. But if a woman loves and respects her husband, she could continue to have sex to please him, even though she didn't get much out of it. Your situation is quite different. You are married to an ailey cat who treats you shabbily and you are bitter and resentful. You didn't ask for advice, however, just a chance to unload. So here's your letter and I hope you feel better seeing it in print.

Successful Living

Writing Brings Joy Into Invalid's Life

Dear Doris: I like the letter from "Poem and Prose". I write poetry myself and have written a couple of songs. I was a bed patient with T.B., with plenty of time on my hand to think and write and that's how I got started.

This month I was informed I have cancer in the lower part of my spine. So — I must again try writing or also sing. I do not want to waste what time I have left.

I have almost conquered the typewriter with my left hand (my right one is partly paralyzed). I take care of a home, cook, etc., but no heavy work.

Please send me the leaflet, "How To Get Started In Writing". I am sending you one of the poems from my book.

Another Doris.

Dear Another Doris: Your poem "Life's Burdens" is lovely, and reveals your uncomplaining spirit. Keeping up morale in the face of a fatal disease is about the toughest thing any of us could do.

I am sending you the leaflet. But you are already started, aren't you?

Even if you just write what comes to your mind about how you feel, it will strike a responsive chord in your readers and give a lift in many places you wouldn't suspect.

(Ask Doris about your difficulty, writing her in care of this newspaper. She will discuss it or send you to a source of help.)

Elections Favor Women

ORILLIA (CP) — Margaret Campbell, Liberal member of the legislature for Toronto St. George, said Tuesday women candidates are going to have an advantage in any upcoming election.

Mrs. Campbell told a meeting of the University Women's Club many people will not want to vote against women candidates but she added that candidates "should not be elected because they are women."

Commenting on the appointment of Pauline McGibbon as Ontario's Lieutenant-governor, Mrs. Campbell said she hopes women in the province will not begin criticizing the vice-regal hats and dresses.

"I hope that she will be so corded the same respect that was accorded the men who preceded her," Mrs. Campbell said.

MAGIC LADY

By Cassie

I met a lovely lady the other day whose name is writing books. These little books aren't very big but the thoughts and poems that they contain are very big. Her name is Mrs. E. E. Tremeer of Belleville and here is a sample of why I call her "Magic Lady".

When you meet another Finger of poem, you will find your destiny in 3 fingers and "the magic touch of time".

The magic touch of time" to me is creativity interrupted by someone doing my job.

Writing and articles are opportunities or difficulties.

YOU

Life itself can't give you her address or phone number. It is up to you to find her. It's up to you to fit it.

This week we feature "Purpose" on every day of the week. Purpose is the key to life. It is the reason you're in existence, which way for every age. You have to find it for yourself. It is up to you to be born over and over again. One book only $3.95.

Your Horoscope

By ROBERT HENG HSIEH

Saturday, March 26

Aries (March 21-April 19) If you're organizing at home today watch whom you mix as guests. Be sure all have something in common.

Taurus: (April 20-May 20)—Be flexible in plans you make for today. They are subject to changes because of something that comes up.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) You have to be careful at this time not to make a serious miscalculation where finances are concerned, budget wisely.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) A problem between you and one of your family may come up in front of outsiders. Resolve it quickly so no one loses face.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) You will get a little miffed when someone you know quite well does something that makes you feel you've excluded.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Try not to make bets or gamble with friends today. A misunderstanding is likely to occur over money wagered.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Be sure you take into consideration the feelings of others. Don't be too pushy in wanting things your way.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) You're likely to be angered today because something you're counting on to follow through for you will fail to do so.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You have to be wary of a situation you're involved in with friends. If you get in too deep it's going to cost you.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It would be wise today to be absolutely sure you have your partner's full approval before making major decisions. If not, watch out.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) If you have some work that needs doing you'll fare better in the long run doing it yourself, rather than drafting unwilling hands.

Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20) You're likely to feel rather edgy and a trifle overconfident. This will lead you to take risks you shouldn't.

Syphilis Tests Are Explained

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I read your statement that a blood test for syphilis is routine as part of a prenatal test. Is this test routine anytime you enter the hospital for a test — G. I. sorics, Ky.

You also stated that a test for gonorrhea must be made from a swab taken from the cervix. Is this done when you have a Pap smear? — — — — —

It is risky—for the baby—if a mother has the disease and is not tested for syphilis before the baby is born, and not when the mother enters the hospital.

As to routine tests of patients in general, many hospitals do make a blood test for syphilis when the patient is admitted, but I want you to understand that "admitted" means the patient has been taken into the hospital as a bed-patient.

The syphilis test is not performed routinely when you go to a hospital just to have x-rays, whether a G.I. (gastro-intestinal) series, or others.

As for the gonorrhea test, a simplified method has been developed for identifying that germ, and quite often this is done on the basis of a Pap smear, although not always, by any means.

I have no doubt it would be a good thing to do it a good deal oftener than is now the case, simply because a fairly high percentage of women are found to have gonorrhea, although they are totally unaware of it. That's one of the vicious things about gonorrhea: women (but seldom men) can have it without any apparent sign of it. They can spread the disease without knowing it, and they also can, in time, suffer very serious harm themselves, not discovering it until it is too late to prevent or undo the damage.

Match plus Culbertson system

By Oswald and James Jacoby

Culbertson's main object in playing the Culbertson-4 match was to push the Culbertson system. Thus, he took every opportunity to show how it was superior to the Sims system.

At the same time he gave the Sims system, which never achieved any expert or ordinary player acceptance, a bit of publicity. Of course, it was always unfavorable, but any publicity is better than none.

One of the interesting bids in the Sims system was the Sims three bid. It was forcing to game and asked partner to show aces in immediate response.

Thus, when Mrs. Culbertson opened three diamonds with the South hand she made 4 bid that neither Sims could have made with the same cards.

The bid was also most successful. Dummy's eight of spades forced East's king at trick one and the best the defenders could do was to hold Jo to her contract.

Culbertson's analysis was a trifle faulty. He said that East and West could make four hearts. Actually, the best they could do would be to make three hearts. After Jo's three diamond opening there was really no way for East and West to get into the bidding and stop below four hearts. Of course, down one at four hearts would have been a better result than letting three diamonds roll in but the swing in favor of the Culbertson was nothing like what Ely claimed.

The bidding has been: 3♦

West	North	East	South
		1♦	Dou-ble
Pass	1♦	Pass	1♠
Pass	2♦	Pass	3♦
Pass	4♦	Pass	7

You, South, hold:
♠10854 ♥AK9 ♦A2 ♣J54

What do you do now?

A—Bid four diamonds. You have gone this far. You might as well go a little further.

TODAY'S QUESTION

Instead of bidding three diamonds your partner has bid five diamonds over your five hearts. What do you do now?

Water Quality in Bay Rises, Phosphates Fall

The flow of water-deadening phosphates into the Bay of Quinte has been slipping dramatically.

In fact, the volume may have declined as much as 50 per cent for every round-the-Bay resident, says a provincial government natural resources expert.

"The per capita output of phosphates has dropped by perhaps one half in the Bay," says Jack Christie, director of the Ministry of Natural Resources Glenora fisheries research station near Picton.

The dropoff — a sequel to provincial legislation against high-phosphate detergents several years ago, may be cheering news for environmentalists.

Phosphates set up an ecological chain reaction. The feed algae, which consume oxygen and kill off plants vacuuted aquatic life. The attrition shows up most markedly in depleted fish populations — lose a source of complaint in the Bay of Quinte area.

Stories by Glenora experts so far have centred on Picton, since the community has a fairly stable population. Input of phosphates at the town's sewage treatment plan has been reduced by half, says Mr. Christie.

But the phosphate input has shown a "sizable reduction," he said.

Disposal plants on the Bay have until next year to install stepped-up treatment aimed at reducing phosphates in waste discharges by 90 per cent.

At Trenton, the treatment already is in operation. The deadline for plants along the Trent River waterway was moved ahead a year to 1976.

While the Glenora studies have been confined to Picton, Mr. Christie believes the 50-per-cent per capita reduction likely applies to the entire Bay.

"If algae growth is reduced and rooted plants which nurture small aquatic creatures come back, there could be tremendous ramifications," he says.

However, this does not automatically mean increased fish rehabilitation, he cautions.

"We're interested in seeing how far nature will carry it in the Bay in the direction of self-improvement," says Mr. Christie. "From there, it will become a question of biological engineering to bring the water back to its full potential for fish productivity.

Fish life in the Bay now is dominated by smaller species, particularly white perch, which are of little recreation or commercial value.

Fewer phosphates will help any improvement management projects.

"We hope the phosphates will go down by 90 per cent," says Mr. Christie. "If impotence / elsewhere is a veritable guide, we look to a dramatic reduction in the levels of algae."

The Bay of Quinte study may also produce guidelines for other areas facing similar environmental problems.

Monitoring of Bay conditions began in 1972 — by university, provincial and federal government agencies — and still continues. The objective is to draft a comprehensive information base on the waterway before and after natural improvements.

City Manager Resigns Post

Mr. Elliott, whose resignation is effective immediately, has held the position since last summer, following the retirement of James R. Reynolds.

The announcement of Mr. Elliott's resignation was made this morning by Mayor Robin Jeffrey. His announcement read as follows:

"City council has received and accepted the resignation of Albert E. Elliott as city manager. Council will now immediately seeking a new manager and is hopeful of a replacement soon.

"To carry on in the interim we have asked City Clerk Adam Stalker to become acting manager with his duties to commence immediately.

"We wish Mr. Elliott and his family bappiness in the future."

Mr. Elliott came to Belleville from Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Appointment as acting city manager will result in added duties for Mr. Stalker who was scheduled to retire soon.

Mr. Stalker had intended to retire March 31 but his employment as city clerk was extended at the last city council meeting.

Foster Parents Protest CAS Board Exclusion

By AL ZARAS
Staff Reporter

Hastings County children's aid society directors were elected Thursday amid charges the board was a self-perpetuating body and discriminatory in its practice of excluding foster parents from society membership.

During the annual meeting, Norman Rickaby, an adoptive parent, charged that the board of directors was interpreting the corporation's bylaws incorrectly in excluding foster parents.

This practice, he claimed, was contrary to an opinion he had recently received from a Ministry of Community and Social Services official, with the child welfare branch.

In answering the charges, society president Allan Bronson of Bancroft, said no clear policy to exclude foster parents and society staff from membership has been made. However, he said, a possible conflict of interest could result should such individuals be given membership.

"We are guarding against what could be a problem," Mr. Bronson said. "Our reasoning is that both foster parents and staff are paid out of society funds. This is the reason we feel they have a conflict of interest."

The society, which lists 30 individuals as members — 29 of which comprise the board of directors — is funded by the province and Hastings County, Belleville and Trenton. Six directors are annually appointed to the board by the participating municipalities.

During Thursday's meeting, 30 names submitted by the board's nominating committee were voted into office for 1974. Three individuals, nominated from among the 35 people present, were defeated during the election.

Mr. Bronson said the bylaws of the society — one of 50 in Ontario — do not prohibit membership by foster parents. The only requirements for membership are a $1 annual fee, interest in child welfare and a resolution by the board of directors.

He emphasized that the society's bylaw states an individual "may" become a member of the society by resolution of the directors.

A March 1973 memorandum from Betty Graham, at the time director of the child welfare branch, warned board members of a possible conflict of interest among foster parents and society staff members.

In part, it read ... "if any board member has any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, in any matter in which the Children's Aid Society is concerned ... he shall disclose his interest and shall not take part in the consideration or discussion of or on such matters. Foster and adoptive parents must take particular notice of this potential difficulty."

Mr. Bronson said the board of directors "has not parliamentarily used these guidelines."

John Lambard, both an adoptive and foster parent, charged that the exclusion of foster parents from the society was discriminatory. "We are certainly vitally interested," he said.

In support of this contention, he told the assembly a 1971 survey by the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies, indicates foster parents are members of 43 of 50 provincial groups. Of these, foster parents are board members in 8, prepared statement prior to the meeting. Mr. Bronson said the board of directors will set up a committee to examine the society's bylaws to determine the desireability of opening board membership to foster parents and salaried employees. Committee recommendations would be made public no later than June 27th this year.

County Council Backs Resolutions

Hastings county council Thursday concurred in a Victoria county resolution objecting to a recent 30 per cent increase in the amount of short-term welfare being paid to recipients.

The resolution noted that this increase was out of line with the rate of increase in the cost of living.

Council also concurred in two other out-of-county resolutions objecting to the secrecy of the Environment tabling over jurisdiction for inspection of lots and septic tanks from the local health units.

Objection was also raised to the proposed inspection fee of $100 for lots and $25 for septic tanks.

Although health unit personnel seemed to be aware of the proposed change, county clerk-treasurer Carl Bateman said the county had received no official notification of the change.

Reeve Graham Bell of Marmora township was unhappy with the level of service given by county health unit inspectors.

And Reeve Cecil Woods of Madoc township and Buddy French, deputy-reeve of Wollaston said the change of jurisdiction would mean added costs for home buyers.

Gordon Jones, deputy reeve of Marmora and Lake, also raised on his reeve's complaint about being unhappy with the level of service given.

He said in his township permission had been granted township for use of an old cistern as a septic tank. The cistern under the kitchen, was topped with a plastic sheet.

But a complaint from a member of the Lambton county board of education objecting to a film which was being shown on Global TV was ordered filed.

The complaint said that on the evening of Feb. 18 the network had shown film of nude teenagers engaging in lewd, lascivious and also including rape and murder.

Reeve Thomas Albert Allen, who said she had watched part of the film, termed the complaint a "gutty" reaction.

Anyone not approving should have had the sense to turn off the TV, she said.

She said she and her son had simply been bored by the film.

Associations Want No Wolf Bounty

Fish and game protective associations at Belleville and from the Lower Trent have come out in favor of no wolf bounties.

This was indicated in reports received by Hastings County Council from the Belleville and District Fish and Game Association and from the Lower Trent Game Protective Association.

The two associations want no change in the present hunting season but would like to see licenses for hunters put in force on into the bush, fines for hunters being placed on the bush after the season and stiff fines of up to $1,000 for convicted poachers.

The reports and recommendations of the two were recommendations tabled last year in council by a special committee investigating deer populations.

Council concurred in a Haliburton county resolution calling for a meeting to interview the minister of natural resources regarding the elimination of the wolf population. A delegation from the county will join with the Haliburton body at the Toronto interview.

Discussion on wolves and payment for livestock losses took up considerable time at the morning council session.

Council Favors Moira Lake Park

Hastings county council is in favor of a recreational park being developed on the south shores of Moira Lake.

Thursday at its March session the county body approved the recommendation of its planning board to support the request of the township of Huntingdon that public authority acquire the 250-acre Mayhoff property for development as a general recreation park for area residents.

The property in question is in the area of the Moira Lake United Church camp and the Q-n-Mo-Lake road.

It is recommended also that from 150 to 200 campsites be provided and that 500 to 600 acres lying to the east of the McDonald Corners be included in such a park.

Also Thursday, council indicated it would approve Foghorn Lake in North Hastings as a site for the proposed provincial park, although it didn't go so far as to say the park should be developed.

In his report Thursday to council, Dungannon reeve Calvin White, chairman of the county planning board, said it appeared from requests made to the board for advice and information that the future could see big development in the county for the tourist industry.

It seems that the energy situation is focusing attention on this part of Ontario," said Reeve White "so that we may be entering a period when the beauty of natural surroundings may create permanent jobs serving the tourist as well as accommodating cottagers.

Also in the planning board report was a recommendation that lands contained in lots 12 and 13, concession 11 Huntingdon township, be included in the "resort" area on the official plan to permit the expansion of the existing Cumpkin camp and trailer park.

Mr. Camskin proposes to increase the number of sites to 200, add a swimming pool, recreation building and snack bar. He does not permit power boats on the 75-acre Scuba Lake.

Valued Armful

Helga Schlamp, Red Cross nursing technician, carries sealed containers of blood donated by Bellevillians Thursday. The donor clinic was at Club Canara.

Blood Donors Need A Shot in the Arm

Belleville's Red Cross blood donor organizers today were hoping that donations from a city industry would help offset lower-than-expected response to a public clinic Thursday.

At least 300 donors were anticipated at the clinic held at Club Canara. Some 221 gave pints of blood —75 of them, high school students bused in a group by organizers.

At the last clinic—in January—nearly 450 donors turned out, following publicity that Belleville was rated poor donor source by Red Cross authorities who operate Ontario's Blood-bank supply system. Bellevillians it was discovered, were using many more blood transfusions than they supplied through local clinics.

"We're not supplying all the blood we use back," she said. "And I don't think this sounds very good for a city the size of Belleville."

One reason for the level of response is that many adults may not be eligible to blood-bank service — and its support by voluntary donations.

"Many people don't know about such work unless they suddenly become personally involved — when they might have to donate blood in a family or neighborly situation," said the local Red Cross official.

But while adults may be slackening in their response, younger people increasingly are pitching in.

January also saw a big turnout of secondary school students. Yesterday the 75 teenagers came from Centennial Secondary School.

"More young people are becoming aware and they're anxious to give, "said the local clinic organizer.

To qualify as a donor a person must be 18 years.

A non-public clinic was scheduled today at Northern Electric, when donations will be made by plant workers.

Advertising and bus transportation for the clinic was financed by the Kinsmen Club.

Highlights of the program include: activities of the Royal Flying Corps, construction of the Trenton Air Station, and life in the airforce-up war. Also depicted will be post war operations such as the UN force in Korea in 1952, the airforce in Europe, the beginnings of Transport command, plus the airforce involvement in NATO and Maritime command.

The program, entitled, The RCAF, will have music as well as narration and interviews with personnel who were participating in these various areas of the airforce.

The music portion of the show will feature some songs that were wartime favorties.

Police Raid Sidney House

Officers from the Belleville detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police conducted a raid in Sidney Township yesterday and seized more than 90 suspected marijuana plants and a "substantial" quantity of what is believed to be packaged marijuana from a backyard yard of a Second Concession home.

The police were tipped off to the presence of the plants when they investigated a reported break-in at the Sidney Township home on Monday.

At that time, police were told that someone slipped the lock on the home's back door and stole some $350 worth of goods.

While the police were investigating the incident, they noticed a number of plants in the house and were told that they were simply "carrots".

One of the officers took a leaf sample from the home and the police returned yesterday afternoon with a search warrant.

No charges have been laid yet in connection with the incident pending the completion of a report by the federal government's drug analyst in Toronto.

President Re-elected

During the annual meeting of the Hastings County children's aid society Thursday, Allen Bronson of Bancroft was re-elected president of the board of directors.

Gerald Boyce assumes the duties of past president. Jack Rush those of vice-president. Betty O'Brien remains as secretary.

Alderman Roger Parker, Belleville's appointee to the 20-member board, was elected treasurer. He replaces Rev. Peter M. Tett.

Aftermath of Blaze

It's been nearly three weeks since an early morning fire destroyed the Electronic Control Ltd. plant on Hanna Street. Firefighters fought in vain for four hours to battle the blaze the morning of March 12 at the plant which manufactured electronic equipment for high schools. And now almost three weeks later, these twisted pieces of metal shown in this view looking toward the west wall form the only remnants of the blaze.

New York Twin Seen for County

The Hastings county municipal reform committee will investigate the idea of twinning with a Northern New York state county.

Tweed Reeve Barbara Allen, chairman of the Hastings municipal reform committee told county council Thursday that the committee has promised her to obtain information about twinning and letters have been exchanged with the Jefferson County Board of Supervisors at Watertown. A meeting has been arranged for April 3 and Reeve Allen said she would report at the next meeting of council.

She said a county in Northern New York state was selected because of its common interests as well as easy accessibility for any visits that might take place.

Reeve Allen noted that a number of urban municipalities have twinned with centres of similar size and interests in other countries, but as far as was known no counties have engaged in this kind of exchange.

Hospital Board Raps College

Belleville General Hospital Board of Governors has protested use of a computer by Loyalist College in selecting nursing students.

The resolution passed by the board late this morning called the computerized system "impersonal method," and recommended other student qualifications be considered when applicants are seeking admission to the nursing course.

Papineau Lake Park Gets County Support

Hastings county council will go along with the idea of a provincial park at the Papineau Lake district in North Hastings.

This was indicated Thursday at the March session of county council when members voted 38 to 1 to adopt the report of its planning board recommending that, if requested, approval be given to an application to amend the county plan to permit the development.

Endorsation of the application to amend the county plan was asked of council by Hastings MPP Dave Knight, Tullis and by Hon. Leo Bernier, minister of natural resources.

Reeve Ken Hubbs said that the application would be subject to many considerations including the park master plan conforming to policies of the county plan and that local cottage properties being adequately protected by creation of roads.

However, a majority of the ratepayers in the townships of McClure, Wicklow and Bangor are said to be opposed to side as are members of the Papineau Lake Cottagers' Association.

Township Reeve Felix Browne said following the Thursday vote by county council, that he would be presenting a resolution to his council at a future meeting but declined to say what the wording would be.

He did say, however, that he was bound by the wishes of the majority of his ratepayers.

To make the park development possible, present zoning which now allows cottages and agricultural uses, would have to be changed. The local municipality can oppose any proposed change.

The proposed park development was the subject of much controversy since its announcement earlier this year.

Thursday at county council, Hastings MPP Clarke Rollins said his position supporting the proposed park development was badly misjudged. He said his aim was to assist the county in every way possible.

He made clear that he would not be responsible for changing his wish by property owners living outside the municipality.

Mr. Rollins said the park development would provide needed employment in the area.

The five-year development proposal called for the expenditure of approximately $750,-000 exclusive of land costs, and the paying out of about $80,000 a year to maintenance and supervision.

People in the area were looking for employment, he said.

Planning Board chairman Reeve Calvin White said his committee was not recommending the park be developed — only that if a park was built, Papineau Lake would be the logical site.

CAS Budget Questioned

An increased 1974 Children's Aid Society budget which would up the county's contribution by approximately $60,000 over that of last year has raised questions in Hastings county council.

And councillors want some answers before they give budget approval.

After considerable discussion, the budget request was held over until the next meeting to allow CAS director Bruce Kerr to provide answers.

Deseronto deputy reeve Alfred P. Rollins said it was difficult for the CAS to estimate its budget requirements accurately as it was not known how many children would be in care.

Also, unbudgeted for personnel wage increases to some extent are believed responsible for a deficit of $38,-000 last year and also entered into this year's increase.

But Deseronto Reeve George Lyons was critical of the fact that no county council representative sat on the CAS budget committee and felt there should be some strings put on.

"We are not getting value for our money," he said.

Buffalo's Hopes Are Fading

Kings Wrap Up Playoff Berth

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Los Angeles Kings assured themselves of a playoff berth in the National Hockey League for the first time in five years Thursday night by defeating New York Islanders 4-1.

But gloom descended on Buffalo despite the Sabres' 3-3 tie with Chicago Black Hawks that preserved their mathematical chance of capturing fourth place in the East Division.

In Atlanta, Bobby Clarke scored all the goals for Philadelphia Flyers in a 3-3 stalemate with the Flames.

The Los Angeles victory gave the Kings, third in the West Division, 74 points to stretch their margin over the Flames to six points. Four games remain for Los Angeles and five for Atlanta.

Minnesota North Stars, with five games remaining, are in fifth place, 11 points behind the Kings.

The Kings were unbeaten in their last 10 games on home ice and they set a team record for most points in a season.

Centre Butch Goring scored twice and added two assists to spearhead the Los Angeles attack.

Chicago 2 at Buffalo 2

Buffalo's chances of catching Toronto Maple Leafs all but vanished. The Sabres are seven points behind the Leafs, Toronto has five games remaining and Buffalo four.

In addition, Larry Mickey, recently returned to the Buffalo lineup after breaking his leg in pre-season drill, broke his right ankle after he put the Sabres ahead 1-0 at 4:39 of the first period.

He was carried from the ice after Black Hawk defencemen Phil Russell rode him into the boards. Russell was charged with a holding penalty in the mishap.

The Sabres were angry about a referee's call that wiped out an apparent goal that would have won the game for Buffalo.

With the score tied 2-2 and 70 seconds left, Mike Robitaille let a shot from the point into a maze of players in front of the Chicago goal.

The puck hit goalie Tony Esposito on the shoulder, rolled down his body, apparently across the goal line. But referee Andy Van Hellemond ruled no goal and the judge did not turn on the light.

The videotape replay showed that we scored a goal in the last minute and they didn't count it," said Buffalo coach Joe Crozier.

Philadelphia 3 at Atlanta 3

The Flyers were down 3-2 with nine minutes remaining in the third period when Clarke scored his final goal. With two Atlanta defenders on him, the Philadelphia star skated the entire length of the ice to score from about six feet out.

Gardens Is Home for Toros

Teams Jockey for Position

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The jockeying for playoff berths in the East Division of the World Hockey Association continued Thursday and it now appears the schedule will run its course before the post-season problem is resolved.

Toronto Toros, Quebec Nordiques, Cleveland Crusaders and Chicago Cougars are seeking the three available positions.

The Toros and Nordiques won Thursday night while the Crusaders lost 2-1 to New England Whalers, division champions. The Toros defeated Edmonton Oilers 8-5 in overtime and the Nordiques trounced Los Angeles Sharks 5-3.

New England has first place locked up, while the Toros and Nordiques are tied for second with 80 points each. The Crusaders are next with 78 points and the Cougars have 77. Chicago has four games to pay, Toronto three, and Quebec and Cleveland two each.

The Toros completed a deal Thursday to use Maple Leaf Gardens, home of the Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League, for playoff games and they hope to be there full time next season. They have been playing most of their home games at Varsity Arena.

Wayne Dillon's 30th goal of the season at 9:32 of the overtime gave the Toros their victory.

Toronto coach Bill Harris said he was pleased with Wayne Carleton's play .Carleton's 35th goal of the season put the Toros ahead 1-0 in the final minute of the first period. The coach had said recently expressed displeasure with Carleton.

Edmonton's Ross Perkins forced the overtime period when he scored with 13 seconds remaining in regulation time.

Los Angeles 3 at Quebec 5

Rejean Girour scored three goals to spark the Nordiques. Girour has connected five times in 19 games since being recalled from Maine Nordiques of the North American Hockey League.

Cleveland 3 at New England 2

Tom Webster gave the Whalers a 2-0 first-period lead and they never looked back. The New England club will finish the schedule in Boston before moving to West Springfield for the playoffs. Next year the Whalers will play out of Hartford, Conn.

Keech Helps Spitfires Move Into 2-0 Lead

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Scott Miller scored two goals and assisted on two others Thursday as Windsor Spitfires defeated Oshawa Raiders 5-2 for a 2-0 lead in their Centennial Cup semi-final series.

The third game in the best-of-seven series is scheduled for Wexford on Saturday with the fourth game here the following day.

Miller, the Southern Ontario Junior Hockey League scoring champion, assisted on goals by line-mates Mark Smith and John Travella. Steve Keech from Trenton, Ont. got the other goal for the Spitfires who outshot the Raiders 42-27.

Richmond Gets a Charge From Bignell

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Larry Bignell changed the length of the ice to score in the second period Thursday night, stemming a New Haven Nighthawk drive to save a 6-4 American Hockey League victory for Richmond Robins.

The Robins got goals from six different players as they closed in on a North Division playoff berth.

The win eliminates Jacksonville from playoff contention in the South and puts the Robins four points ahead of fifth-place Virginia. Richmond has two games remaining, Virginia three.

New Haven remains tied with Nova Scotia for third in the North Division, but now has little hope of capturing that spot. The Nighthawks have only one game to go, while the Voyageurs have three.

Richmond seemed on its way to an easy victory as it followed a 3-1 lead in the first period.

But New Haven grabbed the momentum at the start of the second period racking up three goals in six minutes. It took Bignell's charging goal at 11:07 mark to stem the rally and put the Robins ahead to stay.

In the final period, Danny Schock scored after only 26 seconds and Alan MacAdam connected at the 15:03 mark to give Richmond a 6-3 bulge before Rick Chinnici and Ivor Hawes's final score with his second goal of the night.

Chinnick's two-goal effort for New Haven was backed by single goals from John Rogers and Levy Byrem.

IT was the only league game scheduled Thursday night. In tonight's action, Hersey Bears visit Baltimore Clippers, Providence Reds visit Jacksonville Braves, Nova Scotia Voyageurs visit Rochester Americans, Boston Braves visit Sorivetied's Kings and Cincinnati Swords are at Virginia Red Wings.

Dobson Loose

OAKLAND (AP) — Pitcher Chuck Dobson was placed on waivers by Oakland Athletics, the baseball club announced Thursday. Dobson, who has been trying to come back after arm surgery two years ago, had a 9-11 record last season with the club's Tucson farm team.

Gretzky Heads Parade of Stars In Annual Shrine Tournament

By MIKE BRADSHAW
Sports Staff

Everything starts rolling tonight at 6 o'clock at both the Memorial Arena and the Keck-Ellis Rink.

Sixteen of the top teams in Ontario will be playing off for vince and with the calibre of the Belleville Pee-wee Shrine Tournament.

The tournament is rated among the better in the province and with th ocalibre of the participating clubs this year, the event should climb to the top of the pewee tournament list.

Oshawa and Ottawa Voyageurs are early favorites for the Grand Championship, but as tournament director Don Gavey observes, "anything can happen in a tournament, especially in one like this where all the teams are top notch."

"The future stars of tomorrow will be playing in the tourney," commented Gavey, "anyone wanting to see good hockey should plan to come out and watch."

Among the many highly rated players in the three-day event is 13-year-old Wayne Gretzky.

In his seventh season of OMHA hockey, Gretzky is hoping to break the 1000 goal mark at the Shrine Tournament.

Wayne has scored almost 200 times this season alone.

Chronicled as the second coming of Bobby Orr, the young performer wants to help his Brantford squad to the Shriner's Championship.

Oshawa has a player ranked alongside Gretzky, Grove Sobion was given star status for his strong performances throughout the season.

"We have two or three boys who can really handle the puck," said an Oshawa team official, "Grove is just one of them."

That is why Sutton's team is one of those favored to win the event. The Oshawa team has a lot of depth and is very well balanced.

Another pre-tournament favorite is Ottawa Voyageurs.

The Voyageurs posted a regular season record of 16 wins and two ties in 18 games. Ottawa has many strong performers, but none with more desire than goalie, Denis Giroard.

Giroard held the opposition to less than two goals per game in the regular season and holds down the netminder's position despite the fact that he only has vision out of one eye.

The Belleville Rollins peewees will be a strong contender this year, led by their three centres, Clarence Broekema, Kevin Meagher and Mark Crawford.

Trophies and awards will be on hand for Grand Champions, A and B Champions and Runners-up of each. Most Valuable Player, Forward, Defenceman and Goalkeeper.

There will also be draws for a week at the Dave Keon Hockey School, and autographed hockey sticks from the Montreal Canadiens and Detroit Red Wings.

Each team is guaranteed two games over the weekend.

Tonight's matches are 6 o'clock, Toronto Skurz at Centre 70 Kingston (Memorial), Peterborough at Ottawa Voyageurs (Ellis); 7.00,-Don Mills at Belleville (Memorial); Georgetown at Oshawa (Ellis); 8.15, Brantford at Brenalea (Memorial); Kingston at Niagara Falls (Ellis); 9.15, Windsor at Nepean (Memorial), Orillia at Brampton (Ellis).

The Rovers captured the B division Championship, defeating Union Carbide 3-1 to take their best of three series in two straight.

It's Stinson's — Finally

Stinson Construction, first place finisher during the Quinte Hockey League's regular season, finally disposed of Cornerstone Builders Thursday night in semi-final playoff action at Memorial Arena.

Cornerstone wound up in third place in the regular schedule but proved a stubborn foe for Stinson when it came to playoff time. The best of seven set stretched to nine games with a pair of ties thrown in.

Five players shared the Stinson goals in Thursday's deciding game which saw Cornerstone bow out 5-3. Stinson now meets Reid's Dairy, upset winner over Belvedere, in the championship final.

Andy Prudden, Dave Horwood, Don Goodfellow, Ben Jones and Greg Duffy took care of the scoring in last night's win. Dwight Rathwell picked up two assists.

The winners drew six of the 11 minor penalties handed out.

There will be no tie games in the final set. League president Al Kelleher said this morning that any deadlocks will be decided in sudden death overtime.

The Stinson-Reid's final opens Monday and continues Wednesday and Friday at Memorial Arena. Game time for each of the first three games in the best of seven series is 8.30 p.m.

Six Teams For SHBL

The South Hastings Baseball League held its annual meeting recently, at which time it was decided to open the league's play on Saturday, May 18.

The six entries in the league will each play 20 games. No new entries were present at the meeting, but all teams from last year will be back. They are Latta, Melrose, Place's Concrete, Read, Reserve, and Shannonville.

Art Butler remains as the only executive member, serving as secretary-treasurer.

Several new rules were adopted for play this season, among them a decision on rained out games, which have plagued the league in past years.

Any rained out games must be played by the second Monday following with the secretary to set a date if the teams have still not played.

Gymnasts To Compete

Gymnasts from most of the secondary schools in the Bay of Quinte area will take part in a meet at Bayside Secondary School, Wednesday, April 10. Betty Ross of Trenton High School is convenor for the event.

Belleville Collegiate Institute will be aiming to make it three Bay of Quinte titles in a row at the April 10 meet. Last year, BCI, also took top honors, as a team, in Central Ontario Secondary Schools Association competition.

The young gymnasts will compete in floor exercise, vault, balance beam and uneven bars events. Spectators are welcome. The competition begins at 2 p.m.

Chicago Rookie On a Hot Streak

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For a rookie, Bill Madlock is as relaxed as they come. It's the pitchers who have to face him who are becoming tense.

Madlock, acquired by Chicago Cubs in a trade with Texas Rangers, has a 14-game hitting streak and a springtime batting average of .385.

He hit two doubles and two singles and stole home in the ninth inning for the final run in the Cubs' 4-1 exhibition baseball victory Thursday over Cleveland Indians.

The only trouble is that if Madlock's erratic glovework continues, he also may field .385.

"I know the defence will come," he said. "(Coach) Bobby (Adams) says I'm a rare case because I'm too relaxed."

Meanwhile, Oakland A's used Herb Washington, the world-class sprinter from Michigan State, to run for Joe Rudi at first base in the fifth inning. Cleveland pitcher Milt Wilcox promptly balked the non-playing runner to second and Washington breezed home on Reggie Jackson's single.

But Washington's successful introduction to base running didn't prevent an 11-6 loss to Cleveland Indians.

Luzinski jumped for a ball that appeared headed over the fence in pre-game practice and caught his palm near the thumb on the spiked top of the fence. The injury needed 10 stitches.

Bill Robinson, another Philadelphia outfielder, hit a two-run single in the eighth inning to provide a 3-4 victory over Atlanta Saturday.

Two more veterans were placed on waivers—Oakland pitcher Chuck Dobson, trying to come back from arm surgery two years ago, and Cincinnati Reds outfielder Larry Stahl.

Outfielder Leron Lee, who hit .309 with San Diego Padres in 1972, was sold to Cleveland and California Angels shipped outfielder Ollie Brown to Houston.

For the second time in a week, Jeff Burroughs delivered a grand-slam homer to knock off New York Yankees, this time 7-4.

Fred Patek hit a grand slam and Buck Martinez had a solo shot as Kansas City Royals downed the Orioles 14-3.

Cincinnati rapped Detroit's Mickey Lolich and Toronto ace John Hiller for 12 hits, seven of them for extra bases, and clubbed the Tigers 8-1.

Claude Osteen scattered six hits in eight innings as Houston Astros blanked Boston Red Sox 3-0.

Montreal Expos scored six runs in the eighth inning on Ron Fairly's bases-loaded single in Jim Cox's double and Pepe Mangual's three-run homer to down Minnesota Twins 15-18.

New York Mets scored five runs in the eighth inning on RBI hits by John Milner, Cleon Jones, Brian Ostrosser, Don Hahn and Wayne Garrett to defeat St. Louis Cardinals 6-3.

Dave Hilton's bases-loaded single in the 19th inning carried San Diego Padres past San Francisco Giants 4-3 for their sixth straight victory.

Barber, Nicklaus in Front

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Miller Barber said he could have shot a 62 as easily as his 66 in the first round of the $130,000 Greater New Orleans Open golf tournament but he, wasn't disturbed about missing.

Barber and Jack Nicklaus held a one-stroke advantage over a group of seven players—headed by Lee Trevino and Australian Bruce Crampton—tied at 67.

In all, 27 players in the field of 156 broke par 72.

Wilf Homeniuk of Winnipeg was among the players at 72 and George Knudson of Toronto was in a bunch at 73. Ben Kern of London, Ont., carded 76.

Petes Go Two Up on '67s

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

A three-goal outburst by Peterborough early in the third period led the Petes to a 4-3 win over Ottawa 67s in an Ontario Hockey Association Major Junior A playoff game Thursday.

The win gave Peterborough a 2-0 lead in the eight-point quarter-final series.

In another quarter-final test Thursday, Oshawa Generals and St. Catharines Black Hawks played to a 3-3 tie.

At Peterborough, Bill Eve scored two goals before 2,922 fans.

Tim Young, Tom Price and Bruce Baker scored for Ottawa.

The Petes trailed 3-1 going into the final period, but got two goals by the 1:31 mark to tie the game.

Ottawa outshot Peterborough 39-33.

Bud Stefanski's goal with less than two minutes left in the game gave the Generals the tie in a match before 2,512 Oshawa fans.

Rick Adduono gave St. Catharines a 3-2 lead early in the third period and it stood up until Dan Stefanski's goal at the 18:32 when Claude Dupuis notched his second goal of the game.

Laval Upsets Cornwall

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Surot Black Hawks did as expected and Laval Nationals pulled off an upset Thursday night as the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League quarter-final playoffs got under way.

The Black Hawks rolled to an easy 11-4 win over Trois-Rivieres in the first game of their best-of-seven set while Laval upset Cornwall Royals 5-4 in Cornwall.

Seael, first-place finishers in the league's East Division, had no trouble with the Draveurs as they led 3-0 at the end of the first period and 5-3 entering the final 20 minutes.

Robert Ritchie, Sarge Gamelin, Michel Daniel and Pierre Larouche each scored a pair of goals for the Black Hawks with Firmin Royer, Michel Prochaska and Michel Bergeron adding the others.

Alain Dalgic with two, Michel Comtois and Mario Rouillard replied for the Draveurs.

Cornwall, West Division winners, ran into a hot goaltender in the person of Laval's Robert Sauve, who turned back 51 shots, 14 of them in the overtime period which ended at 13:22 when Claude Dupuis notched his second goal of the game to give Laval the win.

Playoff action resumes tonight with Quebec playing host to Shawinigan and Sherbrooke at Montreal in the opening games of their respective quarter-final sets.

BROWN SOLD

ANAHEIM (AP) — California Angels announced the sale Thursday of outfielder Cliff Brown to Houston Astros. The 24-year major league baseball veteran was acquired during the winter in a 16-player trade with Milwaukee.

Lougheed Is Buoyant But Blakeney Subdued

By JOHN DODD
The Canadian Press

Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta appeared buoyant and Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan a more subdued Thursday as they told the legislatures of the oil-price deal they negotiated in Ottawa.

Mr. Lougheed dwelt on the money he calculates Alberta gained through an increase of $2.50 a barrel for Western crude oil: $900 million in taxing and fiscal energy revenues to an estimated 21.5 billion.

By contrast, revenue from all other sources for 1974-75 was estimated by Alberta at $1.1 billion.

Mr. Blakeney stressed that Saskatchewan's only direct gain from the federal-provincial agreement must be an extra $100 million in equalization payments.

He told the legislature the new price of $2.50 a barrel, effective April 1 means Saskatchewan can raise its royalty surcharge by $1.50 a barrel, worth a total of $150 million to $200 million a year.

But those figures are "quite close" to what the province was already receiving through its share of the federal export tax on oil, Mr. Blakeney said.

The Ottawa meeting agreed that after April 1, the two producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan will do longer receive 35 per cent of the returns from the export tax on their oil.

Mr. Lougheed felt that Alberta gained considerably more through a substantial oil-price increase than it would have through a smaller price increase and a continuation of export tax payments to the two provinces.

Quinte Women's Directory

The Mayor's Message

In this directory, for the first time, is up-to-date information on women active in our community. Here is a collective picture of women participating in the positive betterment of a community and themselves.

Next to the family, the community is the most important centre of the activities that make life human, civilised and cultured. No other environment contributes so significantly to nourish the intimate values of life.

Citizens interest themselves in community work for many reasons. It is a safeguard against too much government; it satisfies the desire to contribute something to do that is worthwhile. It provides fellowship.

It is in community effort that we rediscover the personal meaning of a helping hand. Voluntary contribution to the good of the community is an expression of the natural good qualities people have.

Believing in goodness is an admirable virtue, but it is not enough to earn a star in your crown. Contributing to the goodness of the community is.

By belonging to the organizations found in this publication, women have accepted certain responsibilities for constructive contribution and enlarged their personal interest. Things happen when women co-operate and work with others in volunteer organizations. Problems get solved. Wrong things are made right. The beauty and spirit of the community is enhanced.

Mayor.

The purpose of the CWL is to exemplify and promote the ideals of Christian womanhood in home and family life; to recognize human dignity of all people and contribute to the understanding and growth of religious freedom, racial justice and harmony.

St. Michael's CWL meet on the second Monday of each month in the parish rectory. We encourage programs that stimulate interest and concern in our community.

Some of the activities we sponsor are the Hallowe'en fun night which encourages a safer and happier Hallowe'en for youngsters and two community concert tickets for the use of students during the season. We help out various charitable organizations in the community by both donations and our volunteer help.

Kinette Clubs are comprised of wives of members of the Kinsmen Clubs and have the distinction of being the only auxiliary women's service club in Canada.

Although our first obligation is to aid our Kinsmen in their work; we also do service work in the community. The Belleville Kinettes do most of their service work for the Quinte White Cane Club, purchasing white canes, Talking-Book machines, Christmas baskets for the needy blind families, preparing and serving an annual dinner for approximately 90 people to honor their White Cane Birthday, supplying trophies and paying for half the expenses of blind bowlers who also have two Kinettes keep score at every game.

This year we sponsored the Fifth Annual Winter Carnival Queen Contest, prepared a cookbook to celebrate our 25th Anniversary. The proceeds from the cookbook sales are going to the Cheshire Home. Annually we assist with the painting of the playground equipment at the Kinsmen Pool as well as assisting at the Highland Tattoo Weekend.

The Women's Study Guild was organized in 1930 by a group of ladies who were interested in the study and discussion of current events. Many changes have taken place since that time but the organization is basically the same. It is a non-denominational group encompassing varied ages and interests who meet once a month in the members' homes. There is one guest speaker a year and the remaining topics are researched, prepared and presented by the members. Two people usually work on a topic of interest to them and which is suggested and approved by a program convener. Average attendance is 24. It is not a fund raising group although a foster child is supported through Canadian Save the Children Fund. Sample Programs this year: Book review "Rethink"; Committee for an Independent Canada; Metrication; Philosophy and Art of China; James Bay Hydro Project; Law and the Women of Ontario.

The Beta Sigma Phi sorority is an international organization with its headquarters in Kansas City, Missouri. Its objects are to promote friendship and goodwill among its members, to further their understanding and appreciation of all branches of the fine arts by pursuing a course of study prescribed by the international office, and to encourage social service projects in their communities. The Greek letters Beta, Sigma and Phi stand for words in that language meaning Life, Learning and Friendship.

Membership is by invitation only, but it is open to all who are genuinely interested in the sorority's aims and ideals. There are eight chapters in the Belleville area, plus an area council which promotes inter-chapter harmony and co-ordinates joint projects. Chapters meet twice a month, each chapter on a different day of the week, and while some undertakings are common to all, each chapter has its own social and cultural activities and service projects. One current project of all local chapters is to furnish and decorate the Suzanna Moodie Library at Glanmore House. For further information, phone Marg Berry at 392-7495.

Women of Eastminster Church are welcome into the fellowship of this friendly organization. We serve our church, community and the church at large.

All members (approximately 50), meet in the church on alternate months, to discuss general business, followed by interesting speakers and social hour.

Membership is divided into four groups, meeting monthly in their homes, one meeting in the morning, one in the afternoon, and two in the evening. At these informal meetings, members work on saleable handcrafts, study, or invite speakers. Responsibilities toward the UCW are discussed here.

The executive meets separately on alternative months.

Our members greet at church services, visit new members, sick and shut-ins, assist at special services and cater for receptions.

We assume responsibility for Meals-on-Wheels for one month, support the church financially and also donate to community and mission projects.

The Daughters of Penelope is the Senior Women's Auxiliary of the order of AHEPA (American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association). The order is identified by a symbol portraying the head of Penelope in ancient headdress symbolizing friendship and womanhood, which is significant of the very foundation of life, home and country. The Greek letters Theta Pi or Thygateres Tis Penelope translated mean "The Daughters of Penelope".

Objectives and goals — to promote the social, ethical and intellectual interest of its members, to cultivate good citizenship and patriotism for Canada, to disseminate Hellenic culture therein. Purpose — the betterment of mankind. The Chapter members meet monthly at the hall of the Holy Trinity, Greek Orthodox Church.

We have a Tuck shop which is opened once a week to the residents and a cart goes around to the hospital and special care, these people are not able to get out very much so we make it possible for them to do some of their shopping at the Manor. Members are available to do other shopping if necessary. Our coffee shop is available almost every afternoon where they can buy coffee, tea, sandwiches, cookies, etc., and spend a social time with one another and friends and relatives. Money that is raised is spent to make the residents more comfortable and make their life more enjoyable.

The "Philoptochos" is an organization of ladies of Greek Orthodox faith formed in Belleville in 1962 to help promote Greek culture and religion in Belleville and District. One of our greatest dreams was realized in December 1972 when we held our first church service in our own building. The group now meets the third Wednesday of the month at the Greek Orthodox Church, Avondale Rd. Regular duties include making church bread, visiting those who are ill and helping new arrivals to Belleville to feel at home. In the past our main efforts have been towards raising money for a church and hall. The money was raised through bake sales, a dinner featuring Greek foods and an annual Christmas party. Other activities include the making of church linens, cleaning church articles and providing assistance to the Greek community in whatever way possible. What is good taste...?

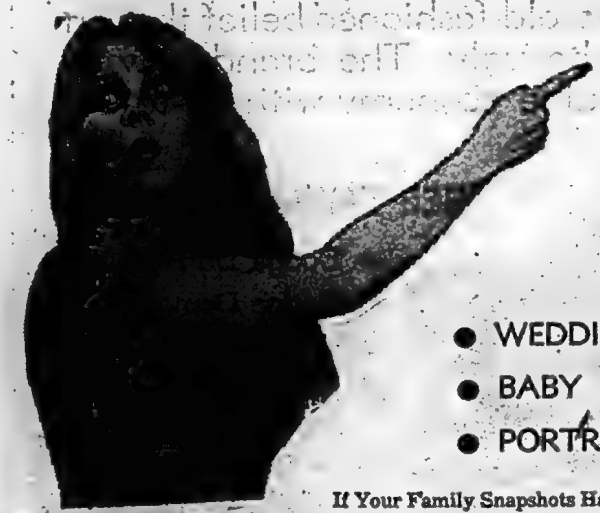
The element in fashion which is hardest to define and to analyse is good taste. You are most acutely aware of it when it is absent. You can't help noticing clothes which are out of place or clamor loudly for attention; while it is in the nature of good taste to be pleasantly inobtrusive. Yet, people who have good taste are also trendsetters for they are confident enough to try the untried.

For the past years, West Wind Boutique has enjoyed the reputation of giving fashionable advice to women of all ages in this area.

From the very beginning, Jean Smith has introduced only those clothes of the finest make, highest quality and newest in fashion.



We thank you all for your patronage and pledge that in the years to come we shall continue to provide the finest apparel and accessories from the world of fashion.

Our dedication to the very best in materials, styling and make is the philosophy of West Wind Boutique.

Belleville Chapter No. 55 Order of the Eastern Star is part of an international fraternal organization. We are the second largest chapter in Ontario with a present membership of 355 members, consisting of both women and men. Our work is benevolent with our main project being ESTARL, which stands for Eastern Star Training Awards for Religious Leadership, with a monetary bursary of $300 to $350 given to student ministers requiring financial assistance to help further their education in theology. The last few years, we have given out three each year right in our own district. We work together with a common goal of "helping others", raising funds by catering, tea and bazaars, raffles etc., basically a great deal of hard work with a most congenial group. We meet twice a month, except July and August, enjoying ourselves socially and giving us the opportunity of making new friends as well as greeting old friends. We have a "business girls" group and a "past Matrons Club" within our chapter, both working and contributing for the good of the Order. We contribute most generously to many other worthwhile benevolent organizations, whatever our funds may allow.

We have had the distinct honor of having two Worthy Grand Matrons and one Worthy Grand Patron for the Province of Ontario, from our Chapter. There are 279 Chapters in Ontario with a total membership of approximately 28,000 members. Our Grand Chapter of Ontario sessions are generally held in Toronto, each September, at the Royal York Hotel.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a world-wide organization formed in 1874. This year we will celebrate our One Hundred Year Anniversary with a convention at Albert College, June 17th-20th. The World Convention will be held in July in Norway. We have 31 members. The last Thursday of the month, we meet in a member's home alternating between Trenton and Belleville.

This is strictly a temperance organization. Each year we sponsor four young people attending a weekend in Guelph where good music, food and fun as well as excellent speakers provide a very worthwhile weekend.

Currently we are concerned about the use of alcohol in many of our secondary schools.

Membership is open to all Christian adults. Funds for our projects come from donations. Some funds grow from the interest of investments such as the sale of our camp at Consecon.
